Aided Own Child Mother Believes Nothing Hopeless

TORONTO, March 7—(CP)—Mrs. Dorothy Bowman says there is no such thing as a hopelessly handicapped child. She has come to that conclusion after a long and successful fight to help her daughter, Carol, who was born eight years ago totally blind and crippled and who later was pronounced by doctors to be totally deaf as well. Now Carol has some vision in one eye and is able to hear. And under her mother's guidance the little girl is gradually learning to overcome a spastic muscular condition in her throat and is learning how to speak. Mrs. Bowman hasn't confined her work of curing to her daughter. At her home in nearby Newmarket she helps any pre-school child who comes to her for assistance and makes a weekly visit to the three Newmarket schools to teach speech therapy. Mrs. Bowman told her own story to the Toronto Cerebral Palsy Parent Council recently. "Even if they say your child is hopeless, you don't know," Mrs. Bowman said. "The percentage of children that are hopeless is nil. Look at my child. She was just nothing at first."

Mothers Can Help

"It just shudders to think what would have happened to Carol if we had said, 'Take her away! Institutions haven't the time, the staff or the feeling to really do much for a child like that. . . . I want to tell all parents who are trying to help their handicapped little ones just how right they are to do it.' After Carol was born, Mrs. Bowman set out to learn how to help her. Leaving Carol in her grandmother's care, she studied in two United States schools teaching deaf-blind children to speak. Mrs. Bowman says that in dealing with handicapped children one must learn to look at them inside and not just at their appearance. "They are so eager to learn," she said. "They need help so badly and who can give it to them better than their own parents?" "After all, nothing is impossible. There may be limitations, but we haven't found them yet."

own head because she could have reformed if she had wanted to do so. Every man who finds that he is married to a nagging woman should serve notice on her that if she doesn't quit he will. That would bring a lot of naggers to their senses.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am a co-ed engaged to another student in the same university I attend. He is my constant companion during school days and comes to visit me three times a week. My mother objects to our being together so frequently because it will be at least five years before we can possibly marry, and she is afraid that he may tire of me before that time. Also, she says that this continual companionship takes away my chances to find another man if my sweetheart happens to get tired of me and leaves me. But my sweetheart gets jealous if I go with another boy and refuse to see him. We are both 20 years old. What is your opinion in this matter? T. A. S.

ANSWER: I agree with your mother that a young girl can do no more foolish thing than involve herself in a long engagement. Of course, it is possible that a boy-and-girl romance has in it the stuff that endures the wear and tear and unnatural strain of a relationship that is neither marriage nor freedom.

But almost always the long engagement just peters out. The man and woman get fed up on each other. Their romance gets torn to tatters. They are filled with jealousies and resent each other's trying to dictate to them. Being in different environments, they develop along different lines. And so in the end, even if they do marry, it is often a matter of duty and honor than it is of inclination. Hence the wise girl steers clear of a long engagement and she never lets any man monopolize her until the wedding day is set.

DEAR MISS DIX: Do you think that most women use their leisure time profitably?

A DISLIKER OF CARDS

ANSWER: Before we could judge whether anyone used leisure profitably or not we would have to know what the individual got out of it. If he got rest of mind or body, or pleasure or amusement, or it gave an added zest to life, I should say he used it profitably, no matter what he did, provided, of course, that his occupation brought no harm or unhappiness to others.

You dislike card playing, but unless one does it to excess it is an innocent and pleasant way to spend one's leisure. If you will observe, you will see that less scandal-mongering goes on over bridge tables than anywhere else where women congregate.

$5.00 be sent to the United Nations appeal for children.

Canvassers were appointed to find out how many were interested in having a Blue Cross Group started, and to bring their report to next meeting.

Next meeting is to be held at Mrs. William Perry's. Roll call is to be answered with house cleaning hints.

Mrs. Barclay Dawson to be in charge of program. Lunch was served, after which the usual vote of thanks was extended to the hostess and lunch committee.

Meeting closed with the National Anthem.
