

A LABYRINTH—The ends of your ear have been occupied—The ends of your four avenue cars ever yet were full, so of course, the house on wheels stopped for me. Not wishing to disturb those who were seated, I was intending to stand but a gentleman up the far end arose and insisted upon me taking his seat. Being very tired I thanked him and obeyed. I was seated, much to my surprise, in a prettier, and much better dressed than my self, entered the car. No less than four gentlemen arose instantly offered her seat. She smiled sweetly and unaffectedly, and the thinking the gentleman who urged the nearest seat to her, she seated herself with a peculiar grace of manner. She had one of those faces Raphael was always painting—touching sweet and expressive. A little after this young beauty had taken her seat, a poor woman, looking very old and very pale, with that care-worn, haggard look that poverty, and sorrow, and grief had given, came in. She might have been one of those who were distressed who work like slaves and—starts for their labor. She was thinly and meanly clad, and seemed weak and exhausted. She had evidently no shapeliness to throw away, and while in the car to stand by her rest white she was helped on her journey. When she came to the depot for the moment, none of the gentlemen offered to rise, Raphael's angel, with sweet reproving eyes, looked on those who had offered her a seat, and seeing none of them attempt to move, and just as myself was rising to give the poor old lady a seat, she smiled and insisted upon me taking her seat. It was all of the work of a moment, and the look of grateful surprise the old woman gave her, and the glance of sweet pity the beautiful girl bestowed on the woman as she yielded her seat, were the evident counteraction of the broad cloth and the white dress. She seemed to shame, all were to me irresistibly interested and instructive. One of the same breadth of wares, apparently overpowered with confusion, got up and left the car, and the Raphael's angel took his vacant seat.—Day Book.

HUMAN BRUTES—There are men of the world, of decided talents and excellent qualities, whose influence is greatly abridged by their meanness and incivility. Their qualities are sheathed in a porcupine crust.—Their warts of family, tact in one word, of adroitness, render them unpleasant persons in society, and though we admire their abilities and their worth they are so rude and cynical that they are not to be tolerated. I was derived from the company of a higher intellectual world, or bar. Next in importance to acting, is the method of acting, and manner is power.

A VULGAR ERROR.—One of the "vulgar errors" in France is that it is not allowed to cut down a person found hanging or to break open the door of a person suffocating himself with the fumes of charcoal, without the presence of the commissary of the police. A woman living at No. 14, Rue des Tournelles, on returning home on Saturday, found her husband hanging to the window, and struggling in the agony of death. Instead of cutting him down, she hurried off to the commissary of police; but when the functionary arrived the man was quite dead.

A SPIDER'S WEB.—On stepping out of the house, my attention was attracted by a spider's web covering the whole of a large lemon-tree nearby. The tree was oval, and well-shaded; and the web was thrown over it in the most artistic manner, and with the finest effect. I had that I would need out, in the center of a tent, from its circumference to the neighbouring bushes; and it looked as if some genius of the lamp, at the command of its zaster, had exhausted taste and skill to cover with this delicate drapery the rich-looking fruit beneath: I think it would need out, in ten years, any experiment would not be very agreeable, especially if the man was alive when put under the press; but the fact is interesting, as showing us of what stuff we are made.

Notice to Travellers. It has become an established fact that accidents will happen notwithstanding the care and attention which may be paid to the safety and convenience of travellers. Excursions to the sea, bridges will be left open, and care run off the track as usual. It is well enough for the public regulations in caution concerning travellers. "I take heed," yet these casualties will occur, which require every precaution, and a prudent, business, &c.
