There is no corporation or management which gives to the travelling public a more efficient and up-to-date service even during the winter season than that of the Dominion Atlantic Railway and Steamships. The many persons who read these lines, thousands of whom who have occasion to travel from time to time know what it means to be made feel "at home" when moving about from place to place. The D. A. R. conductors, etc. of all grades are the soul of friendliness, while the captains and officers of the firm's steamships are equally if not more so.

The S. S. Bon now plying between Yarmouth and Boston is commanded by Captain McKenzie, one of the most genial and courteous of men. His chief officer is Alvin Simms who is ever interested in the welfare of the travelling public. Purser Smith, for very many years in this employ, cannot do too much for the thousands of passengers all of whom it is a pleasure for him to meet. His most painstaking, at all times ready to give all possible information and cheer the oft-tired and worn out traveler. Such a course rapidly increases travel, by making it exceptionally pleasant besides taking away "that tired feeling" or trip by steamship. It is thus natural that his company should be the interests of the travelling public have him hold the position he has during the winter while the E. S. Prince George is laid up, his actual place being on the latter during the remaining part of the year. The other prominent officers of the "Boston" are P. Robicheau, Chief Steward, and Norman Currie, Chief Engineer, the latter being a native of Charlottetown. These gentlemen also know just what to do for the comfort of passengers and are ever ready to perform their parts in the most satisfactory manner. Purser Boggs occupies a similar position on the S. S. Yarmouth between Dalry and St. John during the winter to that of Purser Smith on the "Boston," the actual place of the former being on the S. S. Prince Arthur between Yarmouth and New York during the summer. All the many nice things already written about Purser Smith are equally applicable to Purser Boggs. The position of Purser is naturally a trying one but these officers make it a pleasure not only to themselves but also to the travelling public. Captain Potter the efficient officer at present in command of the Yarmouth runs on the same route with the S. S. Prince Rupert in summer and Chief Steward R. L. McLatchey now of the "Yarmouth" also transfers to the "Rupert" when that ship assumes her summer duties. The latter gentleman is equally courteous and capable and thus the passengers by the "Boston" and "Yarmouth" are served with the best food available cooked in the most agreeable manner. Chief Officer McKinnon now of the "Yarmouth" runs on the "Prince George" in summer, and the Chief Engineer of the former is D. Ferguson. Without exception no steamships on any route are controlled by a more courteous and capable lot of gentlemen, and the management deserves the greatest commendation in their choice of officials.
