

An Acadian's Grave.

THE PICTURESQUE RESTING-PLACE OF THE FOUNDER OF CARAQUET.

The traveller down the road leading from Bathurst, in the Province of New Brunswick, to Caraquet, shortly before reaching the large stone church near the latter village may observe on the left-hand side of the road a beautiful grove of beech, maple, and other forest trees, covering at least five acres. The grove stands on an eminence about eighty feet above the sea, and through the trees may be caught a view of Point Maisonette, at the northern entrance of Caraquet harbor. To the east is the low island of Caraquet, and to the north, across the bay of Chaleur and bounding the horizon, are the dark hills of Gaspé. When the air is clear, the hamlets which cluster around their base can be readily distinguished. To the east of the grove, and nestling close up to it, stands a time-worn church. Not far from the harbor, in a clearing made among the trees, stand some two or three ancient grave-stones. On one only is an inscription visible, and by removing the long grass which partially conceals it, the traveller may read the following words:—

"Miser enim mei saltem vos amici mei quis manus Domini fetigit me. Ici repose le corps de ALEXIS LANDRY, decede le 6 de Mars 1798 age de 78. Memento Mori. Souvenez vous de ce qui nous est arrive, la memo chose vous arrivera, ce fut hier notre tour, ce sera peut-etre le votre aujourd'hui."

Rendered into English, the inscription is as follows:—"Pity me at least, oh, ye, my friends, for the hand of the Lord hath touched me. Here reposes the body of Alexis Landry, deceased, the 6th of March, 1798, aged 78. Be mindful of death. Remember that that which has come to us will come also to you, and that that which was our lot yesterday may perhaps be yours to-day."

From John Lewis Landry, the great-grandson of Alexis, who resides not far from this spot, may be learned a little of his ancestor's troubled life. At the time of the grand derangement, as the Acadians now call their expulsion, and when the storm of war had burst upon Grand Pre, Alexis was residing there with his sister Marie. When the captain of ship-of-war, which was to transport the Acadians from the home of their youth, saw Marie, she was so lovely that his heart was touched with compassion, and he told the brother and sister that they might remain in their ancient home. But Alexis replied that they would share the fate of their brethren, and after various wanderings he came as the first settler to Caraquet, and cleared the land on which this grove now stands. After this he resided for seven years at Shippegan, and on returning once more to his old clearing he found it covered by a new growth of trees; and these, never again molested by the hand of man, now constitute what the Acadian residents call "la loge." Fair Marie, his sister, now sleeps her last sleep, not among the verdant fields of Grand Pre, where the happy days of her childhood were passed, but in the far-off churchyard of a distant parish in the province of Quebec.—Boston Advertiser.
