

HAPPY ANGLER

Prince Edward Island, already acclaimed by Canadian anglers as one of the best fishing areas in the country, had its good fishing reputation reinforced last weekend. Al Huestis of Halifax, N.S., who spent the Easter weekend in P.E.I. said Sunday night after two days of fishing in Island ponds

Chinese-Canadian Recounts Troubles With Immigration

VICTORIA (CP) — A weary and disillusioned Chinese-Canadian came home from Hong Kong Saturday without his new bride, after failing to satisfy immigration department officials on his status in Canada.

Lee Wing Ting, whose father had charged earlier that the young couple was questioned by immigration officers in Hong Kong, said he had no alternative but to leave his new wife there while he returned to Victoria to work.

"I'm due back at work Tuesday," he said, "I couldn't wait any longer."

Through an interpreter, Mr. Lee explained that he appeared before Canadian immigration department authorities in Hong Kong with his bride-to-be in November of last year.

At that time the officers subjected him to a four-hour grilling and questioned his fiancée, Ma Man Wah, for three hours. Only a few minutes was spent on Miss Ma's suitability as an immigrant, he said.

"They told me that she was satisfactory, but that neither of us could come to Canada until I answered questions about myself and one of my brothers."

"ASK SILLY QUESTIONS" "I told them there was nothing to say. I told them that every member of the family was a Canadian citizen and that my father was born in Canada. They asked me silly questions about the village where I was born and I couldn't make them realize I had left there 15 years ago."

In his family home Saturday night, Mr. Lee's father Lee Yick produced a wad of citizenship certificates—one for each of his five children.

During the four-hour questioning session in Hong Kong, young Mr. Lee says he was ordered to sign some sort of statement in English.

"I can't read English, so I don't know what it was, but they told me to sign so I signed," he said.

Victoria lawyer David Hummel, retained by the family to plead the young bride's case with the minister of immigration.

Premier Shaw Has Comment On Liberal's Ferry Promise

Commenting yesterday on national Liberal Leader Lester B. Pearson's promise that the Liberals, if elected, will begin immediate construction of an ice-breaking ferry for the Borden-Cape Tormentine run, Premier Walter R. Shaw said, "the significant thing is that the Liberals, during their quarter-century in power, gave little recognition to our transportation problems."

Pointing out that Mr. Pearson, on a visit to the province last fall, promised the Liberals would build a causeway and "is now promising a new icebreaker," the Premier said, "the promises are all peculiar to some types of politicians who are coming before the electorate to seek votes."

"We have definite commitments from the Conservative government, which will be in power for some years to come. A new ferry is promised for the Wood Islands service, a new ferry is about to go into service at Borden, which will provide relief to the other ferries so that they will have time for a thorough overhaul; and we have the stupendous causeway commitment — the main fulfillment of the promise of Confederation."

"The Conservative Government will see to it that this province's transportation problems will be solved."

Commenting on damage to the MV Confederation, Premier Shaw said "such troubles are to be anticipated. It's like getting a new car — there are always minor adjustments to be made before it is satisfactory. I am confident that the difficulties will be adjusted shortly."

The Premier said he was "delighted" with the appearance of the new ferry. "It looks spacious and comfortable," he said, "and it will be of tremendous value on the service."

Space scientists do not wish any earthly germs or organisms carried to the moon.

Spacemen arriving later never know whether such forms of life were native to the moon.

In its sterilized payload the 730-pound spacecraft carried instruments to help settle the long-standing scientific controversy of whether the moon got its stockpiled space volcanic eruptions, battering by meteorites or a combination of the two. The instruments included:

1. A television camera to take close-up pictures of the face of the moon.

2. A gamma-ray spectrometer to measure radioactivity of the moon and provide clues to the elements that make up the moon's crust.

3. A highly sensitive device to record moonquakes and the impact of meteors on the moon's surface.

4. A temperature gauge to record lunar temperatures, believed to range from 260 degrees to above zero Fahrenheit to 230 degrees below.

5. A radar altimeter to measure the moon's radar reflection properties.

It was planned for Ranger-4 to begin taking pictures of the moon early Thursday morning and transmitting them back to earth. Forty minutes later, the balsal wood-encased ball containing the seismometer and temperature gauge was to bounce onto the Mare Nubium—one of the moon's dry ocean beds—where it was to eavesdrop on lunar activities for 30 days.

BOLTS FROM ORBIT

It consisted for about six minutes, then over Ascension Island in the South Atlantic the Agena fired again. The craft bolted out of orbit at 24,500 second leg of its moon flight.

Two minutes later the sterilized Agena was separated and turned off course so that it could not follow the craft to the moon.
