Average 1975 Income In U. S. May Be $7,100 Per Family

WASHINGTON — By 1975 the United States can be earning a spendable income averaging $7,100 a family, if it protects its competitive economy with "unending vigilance," the Committee for Economic Development said Saturday.

The 7,100 average, in dollars with the buying power of 1956 money, is "not an imagined Utopia, it is a practical goal for practical men," said the privately-supported research committee of 150 U. S. businessmen and educationists.

It compares with today's average of 5,300 a family, after payment of taxes. The foreseeable rise, said CED, is more than the average family now spends for both food and clothing.

It can be attained, the report said, by public and private policies which merely maintain the growth rate at which the U. S. economy has expanded since 1880. Total output has risen about three per cent a year, output a man has risen two per cent a year.

Some tendencies now are visible or imaginable, the report said, which could halt the growth. It named inflation, over-regulation, burdensome tax rates and failure to raise the standards of education as among the chief hazards.

The committee normally devotes its reports to individual issues like taxes, defence, tariffs and other specific national problems. The studies frequently have had some influence in Congress and the executive branch.

"There are plenty of examples in history of thriving societies where the dynamism gradually burned out," CED said.

"It is quite possible to see several tendencies, some already evident and others easily imaginable, that could stop our long trend of growth."

Coun. Johnstone Pleased With Ottawa Reception

Highly pleased with the reception accorded the brief presented last week to the Prime Minister by the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, Councillor E. W. Johnstone returned last night to Charlottetown where he is one of the participants in the campaign for the Mayoralty in next Wednesday's election.

Councillor Johnstone attended the meeting of the federation's national executive in Montreal last week. From there they went to Ottawa where they presented their brief to Right Honourable John Diefenbaker in his East Block office. The consensus of those who had been in similar delegations in other years said that the reception was the warmest and the most sympathetic they had ever received, he reported on his arrival here.

The chairman of finance in the Council here said that the Prime Minister showed a keen awareness of the plight of the municipalities. He told us, Councillor Johnstone reported last night, that he had discussed municipal problems at length with Hon. Michael Starr, his Minister of Labor, who had first hand knowledge of the problems from his experience as a former mayor of Oshawa. As a result of those discussions, the Prime Minister told the delegation he felt that something had to be done to ease the burden on the municipalities.

The chairman of finance said that the proportion of grant to the provinces that goes to the municipalities be on a uniform basis in every province. "I feel," Councillor Johnstone observed, "that the agreement between the Federal government and the provinces should specify in each case the proportion, or amount that will be made available to the municipalities."

Prime Minister made no commitment other than that he would give them most serious consideration.

Of particular interest to Councillor Johnstone was the matter of taxes to the municipalities on railway-owned property. This presents a problem inasmuch as Crown corporations are in theory at least, free of government interference. They are not dictated to on matters of policy by the government. While the Prime Minister recognizes the injustice of railways having different scales of taxation in different localities, the government's hands are tied, it was explained, unless policy affecting the situation is changed at some future date.

It would mean a matter of something like $12,000 to Charlottetown said Councillor Johnstone who explained that, clear of the hotel here, the railway pays at the rate of 1.6 per cent on their own assessment whereas the city tax rate is 2.75 per cent.

In some municipalities in other areas in Canada the railway pays the equivalent of full tax rate, Councillor Johnstone observed.

Says Old Age Benefits In Canada Top Those In U.S.

—only slightly above the 56-per cent level which obtains for all beneficiaries in Canada.

"In the area of old age assistance on a means-test basis, the Canadian structure is currently providing average benefits of 52 per cent of per capita consumer spending while in the U. S. the average is 46 per cent."

Mr. Anderson said that while the U. S. benefits are weighted in favor of people of lower past earnings, this principle—because of the nature of the program—will not come into play for many years into the result that at present higher-income married contributors retiring under the system, are becoming entitled to benefits much greater in value than the contributions they have made.

Comparing the systems of the two countries, Mr. Anderson says: "Using the age 65-and-over as a base, in Canada, under the present system, 64 per cent are entitled to old age security and are currently receiving benefits. In the United States, 58 per cent are currently receiving old age security benefits or benefits under the parallel programs for the civil service and railroaders."

INCLUDES 71 PER CENT "Additionally in Canada, seven per cent of the old age population is receiving old age assistance, but not old age security, in the U. S. this percentage is 13 per cent, so that the two groups together constitute 71 per cent of the old age population in both countries."

"The remaining 29 per cent in Canada will be eligible for old age security at age 70; in the U. S. 13 per cent will be eligible for old age security at age 72 or upon prior retirement—but 16 per cent will not be eligible for old age security and their only prospect of receiving any old age assistance. This latter situation is also true for most of the 13 per cent now in receipt of old age assistance in the U. S."

"Thus the Canadian system extends to all the current old-age population, while many in the U. S. will never be eligible for benefits."

Mr. Anderson says that in comparing benefit levels, he believes the best yardstick is the per-capita level of consumer spending, which is about 36 per cent higher in the U. S. than in Canada. He added:

CANADIAN LEVEL HIGHER "Our current old age security program is providing benefits equal to about 56 per cent of per capita consumer spending. In the U. S. the average level is about 42 per cent."

"While the average is 47 per cent for retired single workers, it is only 38 per cent for retired married couples and widows. Of course, the American system with its graded benefits provides a broad range of benefit levels which currently extend from a low of 19 per cent of per capita consumer spending for married couples to a high of 82 per cent for retired single workers."

"Significantly, the maximum benefit levels for married couples and widows are 61 per cent of per capita consumer spending, while many in the U. S. will never be eligible for benefits."
