CARE OF THE MOUTH.

Fine Teeth and How to Preserve Them. Valuable Washes.

Dentistry has reached such perfection that though the shape of the individual tooth cannot be controlled, the general contour of the jaw may be regulated. The semi-circle of teeth can be flattened or arched as beauty requires.

The popular advice as to the care of the teeth is too indefinite. A general washing night and morning does not suffice to keep teeth brilliant and free from discoloration. A soft smallish brush should be used after each meal about the necks of the teeth. There the enamel is thinnest and least intact, so that bits of food are likely to be retained. A decidedly stiff brush should be used to cleanse the inner side of the teeth where tarter deposits itself, and on the double teeth with their many irregularities of conformation. But it is senseless to rub the smooth outer enamel of the front teeth with bristles, when a bit of chamois or soft linen with a little dry precipitated chalk will polish them effectually. The "bits" should be new each time.

Silk floss should be passed frequently between all the teeth but with little pressure. Even in the privacy of one's own room it is not desirable to use a toothpick. A wooden toothpick is clumsy, liable to inflame the gums. With the more delicate quill-pick there is danger of severing minute fibres of the gums. The toothpick process results in time in a loosened molar. If a shred of food gets obstinately wedged beneath the gum it is better not to worry at it oneself, but to go to a dentist and have him with his practiced manipulation and needle-like instruments remove the particle.

The greatest precaution should be taken not to loosen a tooth. A full mouth of teeth is a great beauty; spaces are not only unbeautiful but fruitful of trouble, the food continually pressing in keeps the gums inflamed, and on the health of the gums and mucus membrane of the mouth depends to a big extent the health of the teeth.

An aching tooth should never be borne with. I have known a woman to endure, without consulting a dentist, the repeated excruciating toothache that attends a dying nerve. The pain finally subsided, for good and all; but the tooth gradually became discolored, taking on a drabish tone. Then, for the first time this unlucky woman suspected what had happened. The pulp, the dead nerve, was removed, but the tooth never regained its clear pearly lustre.

If one is troubled with dyspepsia or any gastric disturbance, the teeth bear witness to the fact. They lose their brilliancy, often become stained a dark saffron about their necks. Every pretty dyspeptic should make a point of keeping by her bedside a wine-glass of water into which is stirred a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda to rinse her mouth as often as she wakes. The bicarbonate counteracts the effect of any acidity of the stomach on the teeth.

Pure castile soap may be used occasionally with benefit; the daily use of soap on the teeth is discouraged by the best dentists. Suds leave a deposit of soap beneath the gums that encourage their recession.

A few drops of listerine, or myrrh, or weak carbolic acid and water, make an excellent mouth-wash, antiseptic, healing and hardening to the gums. The myrrh leaves an aroma as of violets in the mouth. A handsome and fastidious woman of my acquaintance takes internally several times a week, a little pellet of rhubarb dissolved in bicarbonate of soda and water to sweeten her breath.

The beauty of the mouth is not made complete by the rosiness and smoothness of the lips and the perfection of the teeth between; also its size is a minor consideration. What we demand of it is that it shall please us; if it pleased us we are apt to call it a pretty mouth. It must have either positive beauty of outline, or an expression of geniality. Everybody dislikes equally a "prunes and prisms" mouth, or the lazily obtruding mouth which is the possession generally of stupid, heavy people who let their mouth pout out in pure inanity. Exact, nice, but easy enunciation moulds the mouth into dignity and beauty.

The Jumbo of Pikes.

A pike of monstrous size has been taken in Coleraine. An inland revenue official has written to vouch for its weight of 61 pounds, the length being given as 78½ inches, and the girth as 31½ inches. This amazing beast seems to have been basking in the Ogilvy river, and was too proud to get out of the way of a boat. Being hit on the back with an oar was too much for its dignity, and it seized the offensive implement in its teeth with the idea, no doubt, of confiscation. But it did not know that a more lethal weapon lay concealed within the boat. A boat-hook, armed like a gaff, pierced its side, and so it perished miserably. The worst part of its ignominious fate was the fact that no steps were taken to preserve it.—London Black and White.

Oldest Tune in the World.

Which is the oldest tune in the world? Most people would guess the Delphic hymn to Apollo, which was dug up the other day. But they would be wrong. It is the tune which is now wedded to the words "We won't go home till morning." Napoleon's soldiers played it in the shadow of the Pyramids in 1799, and the Bedouins who heard it wept for joy. It was found among the children of the desert by the Crusaders. I have no doubt that it was howled by Chaldæan chappies when they were merry with wine. It is—according to experts—the elemental, protoplasmic tune.—Pall Mail Gazette.

A modern departure in the way of advertising is to send out sheets of blotting paper stamped with the name and address of a firm.—London Journalist.

Coffee as a Deodorizer.

One of the best of deodorizers is burning coffee. Throw a teaspoon of ground coffee upon the cookstove to do away with any disagreeable odor in the kitchen and put a small quantity on a few coals upon a fire shovel to carry to any distant part of the house. It will remove any musty odors from closets or closed rooms.

A QUEEN CITY BABY.

ITS LIFE SAVED BY LACTATED FOOD.

BABY BODDIMGTON.

The mothers of Canada who used Lactated Food for their babies, are always delighted with the grand results. During the hot summer weather it "saves babies' lives."

Mrs. Boddington, of Toronto, says: "I used cow's milk for my baby, but it did not thrive. I then commenced to use Lactated Food, and I found that baby soon improved, and has remained contented and well."

Mr. Andrew P. Stirret, the popular chemist, cornor of Dundas and Brock Ave., Toronto, says: "I indorse the above testimony, and would say, then when Mrs' Boddington found it necessary to feed her baby from the bottle, every device was tried to obtain pure milk, even to securing the milk of one particular cow. After all this, the baby continued to fret and cry. Finally, Mrs. Boddlngton was induced to use Lactated Food, and from the very first feeding the baby began to improve, and (as you see by the photo) is now the picture of health and contentment. Ever since, I have most heartily recommended Lactated Food to my customers."
