Kitson's Application For Recount Granted

Judge C. St. Clair Trainor yesterday granted Liberal George Kitson's application for a recount of the votes registered in the 2nd Queens Assemblyman contest, thus bringing to three the number of recounts authorized since the end of the provincial general election held Sept. 1.

Earlier the applications of the PC's Leslie Hunter, defeated Councillor candidate in 5th Kings, and Wellington MacNeill, defeated Councillor candidate in 4th

Queens, had been granted by their respective county court judges.

Mr. Kitson is seeking to upset the election of his opponent, Phillip Matheson, who was declared elected by a margin of 12 votes. The recount will be held before Judge Trainor in Charlottetown commencing at 10 a.m. Friday.

Mr. Hunter and sitting member Liberal George E. Saville each polled 675 votes in 4th Kings on election day, but a tie-breaking vote cast by county returning officer, Sheriff J.B. Edwin Reid, gave the seat to Mr. Saville by one vote.

In 4th Queens official returns show Mr. MacNeill running behind his opponent former member Harold P. Smith by a margin of 22 votes.

The Kings' recount opened before Judge J.S. DesRoches in Georgetown yesterday and was immediately postponed until Friday at 10 a.m. The 4th Queens recount begins today at 10.30 a.

Fishing Cove To Be Dredged

OTTAWA (Special) — A $19,575 contract for two dredging projects at Fishing Cove, P.E.I., was announced today by the department of Public Works.

Successful bidder was Norman MacLean of Murray River. Completion date of the work is the end of October.

The project involves dredging to three feet below normal spring tides of two areas; one along the breakwater 385 feet long and of a width varying between 50 and 165 feet, and the other at the wharf 275 feet in length and the width varying between 60 and 135 feet.

become known across Canada. It had been and could continue to be the common aim to seek projects and enterprises of mutual benefit to all the Atlantic provinces.

MAIDEN SPEECH
Making his maiden speech at the conference, W. R. Shaw, premier-elect of Prince Edward Island, suggested the possibility of attracting potato processing plants to New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island.

He said he had been "disappointed" to learn such plants have been established in Ontario. "Potatoes in their natural form were a forbidden export to Britain but they could be placed there in some of their processed forms."

Mr. Flemming listed a three-point program for dealing with the problems of the Atlantic provinces.

They were extensive and intensive exploitation of the region's resources in an efficient manner, accelerated development of industries, processing the indigenous resources of the region and expansion of established secondary industry and development of new secondary manufacturing industries in the region.

"The most spectacular economic growth based on natural resources since World War Two, has taken place in the three Prairie provinces and British Columbia," he said. "Not in Ontario, not in Quebec and not in the far north."

FEDERAL FUNDS
"What is needed," said Mr. Flemming, "is a policy under which federal funds are made available to take broader basic actions which are essential if the rate of economic growth in the Atlantic provinces is to be substantially increased."

Transportation facilities within the Atlantic provinces must be improved and the region must be given cheaper access to Canadian and world markets.

Projects under consideration include a Prince Edward Island causeway linking the island with the New Brunswick mainland and the Chignecto Canal linking Northumberland Strait with the Bay of Fundy across the narrow isthmus of Chignecto between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Later, in the Senate ceremony Governor General Vanier paid tribute to Mr. Massey who as the first Canadian-born governor-general, had "blazed a new trail and well he has done it."

"From the bottom of my heart I thank him for the assistance and the advice he has given me."

TV COVERAGE
The proceedings in the Senate chamber, witnessed across Canada on television, lasted 45 minutes from the time the slender, erect Gen. Vanier entered with his attractive wife, who now becomes chateleine at Government House and the country's first lady.

But the actual installation took only 15 minutes.

The commission of appointment, signed by the Queen at Halifax Aug. 1, was read in English and French by Edmund Joly de Lotbiniere, acting secretary to Gen. Vanier.

The general sat on a chair in front of the Governor-General's dais and at the head of a long table at which the cabinet sat.

ADMINISTERS OATH
Then Chief Justice Patrick Kerwin, in ermine-trimmed scarlet robes, administered the three oaths of allegiance to the Queen, of office, and of keeper of the Great Seal of Canada.

"I do, je le jure," Gen. Vanier replied in a firm voice to each oath, as he held a Bible in his hand.

He signed the oath book his signature attested to by the signatures of Chief Justice Kerwin, Mr. Diefenbaker and Robert Bryce, clerk of the privy council.

He then mounted to the throne to sign his first proclamation as Governor-General. Mrs. Vanier, dressed in a black silk dress with a white feathered hat over her silver hair, curtsied to him and took her seat beside him.

The proclamation drew the people's attention to the fact that he had become Governor-General and ordered the Queen's ministers and officers to continue in office.

With its signing at 11:30 a.m. EDT, the installation was complete.

21-GUN SALUTE
An ordnance corps band outside the chamber played the opening bars of God Save The Queen and the first thunder of a 21-gun salute was heard from Nepean Point, near Parliament Hill.

Mr. Diefenbaker, in an address, asked that the new Governor-General's first act be to express to the Queen "the fidelity, loyalty and devotion of the Canadian people."

He spoke of Gen. Vanier's "record of service marked by courtesy and conservation to the service of the Crown and Canada" and applied to him the words used by Tennyson to describe the Duke of Wellington: "Great in council; great in war."

Khrushchev predicted that U.S. scientists will get a rocket to the moon, too, as the Russians did during the co-existence.

PEACEFUL CO-EXISTENCE
"The Soviet pennant, as an old resident of the moon," he said, "will welcome your pennant and they will live together in peace and friendship as we both should live together on the earth in peace and friendship, as should live in peace and friendship all people who inhabit our common mother earth, who so generously gives us her gifts."

Khrushchev had some reassurances about his first visit to America.

"We have come to you with an open heart and good intentions. The Soviet people want to live in friendship with the American people. These are no obstacles to having the relations between our countries develop as relations between good neighbors."

Eleven times in his 700-word airport talk, the Soviet premier spoke of peace.

He was still on that theme when he went to the White House for conferences with Eisenhower only three hours after his landing.

PRESENTS CITATION
As reported by the White House press secretary, James C. Hagerty, Khrushchev gave Eisenhower a citation as a symbol of "the desire of the Soviet people to have friendly and peaceful relations with the people of the United States."

This was in connection with the presentation of a baseball-sized model of the inner sphere of the Soviet rocket that shot to the moon. Inside was a Soviet coat of arms.

It is unlikely that Khrushchev's American admirers can summon the weight to collapse any floors. It's even more improbable he ever will face the situations that confronted two visiting royal ladies.

Queen Marie of Romania sailed into New York harbor one day in 1926 and posed happily on deck for pictures—until one enterprising photographer made the standard suggestion:

After the pay of a $10,000 "gift" which he suggested was standard procedure, the princess did indeed meet the secretary and the president — apparently without even noticing that "under secretary" Weyman had changed into a naval officer's uniform for the occasion.

Later, when the boys from the state department and the navy got around to comparing notes, there was an investigation. Weyman wasn't an undersecretary. He wasn't a naval officer. He wasn't even Weyman.

Mustard King Incident Recalled By Red Visit

By TOM HENSHAW

NEW YORK (AP) — "Mustard" asked the president of the United States.

"Peace," said the King of England.

And a new legend was born. It's usually that way with state visits to the U.S. The more carefully planned and momentous they are, the more they are remembered for some small unforeseeable incident.

It may turn out that way with Nikita Khrushchev.

King George VI was the first reigning British monarch to visit the U.S. during the 1939 Royal Tour of Canada. But the trip might have been forgotten by Americans had he not sampled a hot dog at President Roosevelt's place in Hyde Park, N.Y.

STATELY TOUR
The stateful tour of the Russian Grand Duke Alexis Romanoff Alexandrovitch, son and brother of czars, is recalled chiefly for (A) an Indian girl and (B) the New Orleans Mardi Gras.

Alexis went hunting in Nebraska with Buffalo Bill himself but, it was reported, the royal visitor proved more interest in stalking the sister of an Indian chief than buffalo.

It was at the 1872 Mardi Gras that Alexis — now neatly dressed in a tangle of his Indian maiden—first heard the melody "If I Ever Cease to Love." He liked it. It has been the grand march of the Mardi Gras ever since.

Albert, Prince of Wales, later King Edward VII, picked an unfortunate time for his visit in 1850. A hot presidential campaign was on and a civil war was brewing.

But the prince didn't go unnoticed. Not in Boston, he didn't. There he met Ralph Farnham, 104-year-old veteran of the battle of Bunker Hill. Snorted old revolutionary Farnham to the prince:

"Too damn much royalty around these days."

DIGGER'S SUCCESS

LISBON (AP) — The village gravedigger at Moncarapacho in southern Portugal for years had been insisting there was buried treasure in a ruined house. No one could find it until the gravedigger went to work and uncovered a creak containing hundreds of gold coins worth about $20 each.
