GUEST SPEAKER AT ST. STEPHEN'S—Rev. E. Fream of Halifax was the guest speaker at St. Stephen's Church, Burlington, on Sunday evening, and delivered an impromptu message, urgently appealing to his hearers to put their faith and trust in God, who is the Rock of Ages. Taking for his text, the second verse of Psalm 61: From the end of the earth will I cry unto Thee, when my heart is overwhelmed; Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I, he pointed his hearers to a strong and unchanging God; a God whose saving power is like a great cleft rock, where one may find comfort and safety in the midst of storm and stress. The service of evening prayer was conducted by the rector, Rev. S. J. Davies, who gave Mr. Fream a warm welcome to St. Stephen's Church, of which he was formerly rector. At the close of the service, Mr. Davies asked the congregation to join for a moment in silent prayer, in memory of the late Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King. Bur.

The full executive of the Borden Women's Institute as well as Mr. Charles B. Love and Mr. Herfell of the Borden Branch, Canadian Legion, met at the home of the Institute President, Mrs. Ralph Toombs, last Thursday to discuss plans for a Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic to be held in Borden School on Thursday evening, August 3rd. The organization is a successful clinic being outlined by Dr. J. P. O'Riordan, Medical Director, Maritime Dept. of Canadian Red Cross Blood Transfusion Service, Halifax, and Miss Iphigenie Arsenault, Provincial Red Cross Commissioner.

This will be Borden's first attempt at a Clinic of this kind and the quota set is 100 donors, so it will be up to residents of Borden and the districts surrounding it to rally to the support of this lifesaving service. Free blood transfusions are available to all in the Province who require this treatment, so every person between the ages of 18-65 who is in good health should be a donor.

Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, whom Mr. King sent overseas to command the Canadian Army at the beginning of the Second World War, took his place patiently in line with Mrs. McNaughton.

They came from villages, towns and cities in Ontario and Quebec as well as the capital itself. Scores of United States tourists joined with Canadians in paying tribute to the man who did so much during his years in office to strengthen the bond of friendship between the two nations.

All Canada will join with the capital tomorrow in final honor to the statesman who served as Prime Minister longer than any of his opposites in British Commonwealth history.

At least five Provincial Premiers will attend the state funeral for Mr. King in Quebec and the other Provinces will be represented. Also attending will be representatives of other Commonwealth countries and of countries maintaining embassies and legations in Ottawa.

The King and Queen will be represented by the Governor-General and Lady Alexander, who broke off a trip to the West Coast to return to Ottawa. They arrived today.

Provincial Premiers attending will include Premiers Smallwood of Newfoundland, McNeil of New Brunswick, Frost of Ontario, Campbell of Manitoba and Johnson of British Columbia. There is a possibility Premier Manning of Alberta may be able to come.

Civil servants will work only a half-day, government offices closing during the afternoon in order that employees may attend the funeral or watch the procession.

Mr. King's body will lie in state tomorrow until 2 p.m. when the casket will be closed prior to the start of the state funeral procession to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on Wellington Street, three long blocks from the Parliament Buildings.

The eulogy at St. Andrew's, where Mr. King worshipped during his years in Ottawa, will be given by Rev. A. I. Burnett.

Burial will take place at Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Toronto, Thursday.

POWERFUL FORCE

Under crushing Communist power, United States and South Korean troops fell back firmly on the foothold where their counter-offensive eventually may be mounted.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur's mid-night communique, though not mentioning the fall of Yongdong Tuesday, forecast that further withdrawals might be necessary in the western and central sectors.

In the centre, the badly mauled 2nd American Division fell back from Yongdong after bloody fighting. They took up new positions further south along the main highway and railroad to Taegu, South Korea's temporary capital.

In the deep southwest North Koreans swept round the coast and turned east to threaten the "underbelly" of the Allied defences.

Down the east coast, the invaders pressed hard from Communist-held Yongdok toward the American beachhead at Pohang.

At Yongdong U.S. soldiers pulled out of the town under extreme pressure from wave upon wave of Red North Korean troops and tanks. The withdrawal under flanking and road-block fire was reported orderly.

MacArthur's headquarters made it clear, however, that more withdrawals may be necessary before a tank-tight perimeter can be formed to salvage a beach-head for future operations.

New concentrations of North Korean armor and transport were found and battered by Allied planes at Hamchang, 35 miles northeast of the Yongdong battle area. Like Yongdong, Hamchang is on a main road heading straight to Taegu.

In the southwest, the Northerners sliced a almost unopposed through the water-soaked plains. With Kwang and Kurye firmly in their hands, they were poised to strike along three main highways at Suncheon, the Americans' main supply base in the Far Southeast.

MacArthur's operational report early Wednesday listed eight North Korean divisions—probably 50,000 men or more—in the all-out effort to push American troops off the Korean peninsula.

Against these massive forces are only the 1st Cavalry Division, the 25th Division and some assorted South Korean troops. These are taking the brunt of the assault that was delayed in the month-long fighting by South Koreans and the badly battered U.S. 24th Division, which has not appeared in recent dispatches.

The 24th Division, however, was mentioned by the Chinese Communist radio last night in quoting North Korean Gen. Kim Ir Sen as claiming his forces "wiped out" the division in the Taejon battle July 20.

The bitter campaign to hold on now—and avoid the necessity of winning back a costly beachhead later by amphibious operations from Japan—is settling into a struggle to maintain standing room before the port of Pusan on the southeastern tip of the peninsula. The Allies are planning to take the frontal assaults in depth, dug in behind a shortened perimeter.

The Allies must not lose Pusan, their only good supply port for the campaign, nor can they afford to lose the lines of transport and communication fingering out from the city.

But geometrically-minded military observers have started talking about a "triangle" centered on Taegu, still held from the Reds. They suggest the Americans will be compressed in a triangle based on Pusan, Taegu and Pohangdong. From this beachhead could come a push to throw the invaders back to their own territory, when American military might can be effectively deployed.

The front now stretching on an irregular 200-mile line from north of Pohang, on the east coast, to Red-held Haenam on the southwest shore, is too long to prevent flanking and infiltration while fighting delaying actions against frontal charges.

To counter guerrilla-type infiltrations, the U.S. army banned all Korean civilians from the narrowing battle zone. They will be herded from villages overrun by fighting to positions behind American lines. Any caught roving in civilian clothing may be shot.

Other measures had failed to prevent saboteurs and turn-coats from striking behind American lines. MacArthur's headquarters reported elements of the Red's fourth division continued to roam in the deep southern west coast area without serious ground opposition so far. They were harassed by British and United States naval planes. The Communist force were about 100 air miles west of Pusan in that zone.

east coast by "friendly forces" who harassed—in an operation that put them three miles south of Yongdok.

U. S. warships in new attacks on Yongdok poured 428 heavy shells into Red concentrations in mountains southeast of the wrecked town.

Australian and American planes, gearing their operations to the holding campaign of the 1st cavalry, destroyed or damaged 21 Red tanks Monday, field dispatches said. They also struck at 15 bridges, armored cars and enemy supply lines in 64 missions flown with 191 sorties on the Taejon-Yongdong highway front.

Ten tanks were killed and 11 damaged, an air force spokesman said, in these raids.

had operational atmosphere about it. We headed east from the black Alaskan mountain ranges out over the Bering Sea, north of the Aleutians.

Next stop was Shemya, far out on the end of the Aleutian chain and more than half way to Tokyo. Attu Island lay just to the north and Kiska, where Canadian troops landed in the last war, is to the southeast.

We let down through heavy fog into Shemya, as barren and forbidding a spot as there is anywhere, but it is a key airfield in the airlift.

Shemya is shrouded in fog most of the time and it is there where the navigational skill of R. C. A. F. aircrew will get its greatest test on this airlift. Asked American soldiers there for news and got the stock answer: "But that's one thing we don't talk about in this God-forsaken place, but there is lots of us who would like to be going east with you."

Nine hours from Shemya across open ocean lay Tokyo. We headed for the northern tip of Japan, our plane flew parallel to Kurile Islands. You could see houses in the bays but pilots took care to stay off land. Nobody wants incidents on Kuriles.

Over Japan as night was falling, and a landing at Haneda airport outside Tokyo. American transports dived in ahead of us. R. C. A. F. planes will be adding the drone of their planes to Tokyo airlift.

mention in the "fielding gems" a sensational catch by Alan Stewart, made in centrefield. That's right, we did overlook that one, and it was perhaps the fanciest fielding effort of the lot. We don't know how we happened to forget, unless we're beginning to take for granted the many fine catches this smooth centerfielder makes.

One of Kensington's sports leaders has asked us to tell the fans about a new kind of ball game that will be played in Kensington on Monday, Aug. 21. Donkey ball, it's called, and we understand it will be laughs, thrills, and spills at the rate of one a minute. All players except pitcher and catcher ride donkeys. When the batter gets a hit he must mount his donkey and ride around the bases in proper order—if he can. Sinister words, these last three, if you know donkeys. There are no strikeouts or walks. Fielders must ride to within a step of the ball before they dismount, and they must mount again after throwing the ball. Softballs are used. The twelve trained Texas donkeys are furnished by Ralph E. Godfrey, Crescent, Oklahoma. The teams will be business men and prominent citizens of the community, some of whom will undoubtedly make asses of themselves before the game is over.
