

POETRY.

(WRITTEN FOR THE EXAMINER.)
IN MEMORIAM—HON. EMANUEL MACEACHEN.

None are so desolate but something dear,
Dearer than self, possession or possession
A thought, and claim the homage of a tear;

A worthy Scot is slowly laid,
In Saint Columba's quiet rest:
Where Time's corroding cars and toil,
No more shall move his peaceful breast.

Re-echoed from the sulken weald,
An ardent warrior moved his breast:
As moved his sire on deadlier fields.

No wonder that his pulse would tramp,
At strains his youth had loved to hear,
The notes that onward led his sire—
Those strains omnipotent to cheer.

Perchance, his fealty, his theme—
May have escaped the page of fame;
But generations yet unborn,
Shall know the record of his name.

Go, stranger, where the veteran sleeps,
And shed a tear above the dead—
For there a worthy Scot is laid,
In Saint Columba's quiet rest.

A QUEER CASE.

A LOVELY SOMNAMBULIST AWAKENED BY AN ELECTRIC SHOCK.

A very curious and remarkable case of somnambulism, says the St. Louis "Globe Democrat,"—the heroine of the adventure being well-known in society circles—has just come to light, though it occurred several weeks since.

The facts are these—but let the young gentleman who furnishes the information tell the story in his own way. Mr. Booth's statements are supposed to be reliable. In answer to a question he says—

I am the operator left at the watch after the regular business of the night is over. From two in the morning till seven I am generally alone. I have no objections to relating the particulars of the strange scene that happened in my presence. There can be no impropriety in my doing so, as I shall not divulge the name of the lady, having given a solemn promise to that effect. It was this way—

About a month ago, on a very warm and brilliant moonlight morning, between two and three o'clock, I was sitting in one of the windows to get a little fresh air preparatory to settling down to writing, which would keep me busy until relieved by the morning men. It was exceedingly quiet, not an instrument moving nor any sound without, there came a faint knock at the door which somewhat startled me, for it is very rare to receive a call; indeed, I do not remember of ever before seeing an outside party since I have been in this position. The door was partially open. I said "come in." To my great surprise there entered one of the loveliest of beings. She was richly dressed as if for an evening promenade. I was so taken aback it was a moment before I offered her a seat. She politely declined to be seated, saying that she was pressed for time, and that she had called to collect my subscription in aid of—Society. I glanced at the little book she offered me, then at the young lady, who met my gaze with an air of exceeding sweetness and intelligence.

There was no sign of insanity in that face, (I had not thought of somnambulism) and I could not account for the proceeding. I said "Miss, there must be some mistake. I do not see my name on the list." She replied, "Then it must be in the other book; and I have left it at home. It is five dollars monthly, I believe; you can hand it me, and I will give you credit for it in the proper place. My time is so much occupied in this work I do not know when I can call again."

She appeared so earnest, so ingenious in her remarks I felt there must be a delusion somewhere. Either she or I was mad, I looked at my surroundings to make sure of myself. All seemed right. There were the implements of my profession; the clock recorded 2:45 a.m. There was but one conclusion—my visitor was evidently temporarily deranged. On such an errand at that hour of the morning! What could be the solution of this mysterious behaviour? I was becoming really alarmed. I turned to her again and said: "I am very sorry to inconvenience you, but I have no money with me."

"Very well, I will call again. Good morning." As the lady was retiring her hand accidentally came in contact with one of the instruments immediately connected with the battery, by which she received a severe electric shock. Instantly there was a change in her manner—such a change I will never forget it. She screamed, "Where am I? What place is this? Who are you?" Half-fainting, but conscious and trembling with fear she sank into a chair. Quickly as possible I brought her a glass of water, at the same time assuring her that she was in a safe place and that there was nothing to fear. In a few moments she became calm, and seemed perfectly free from fear but extremely anxious to be conveyed to her home. One remark she made, "I have been walking in my sleep again," let me into the secret of the affair. After giving me direction as to the place of her residence, I left her alone until I could find a carriage or obtain other assistance. Fortunately I met the policeman who patrols the Olive-Street beat. This officer came with me. As she seemed satisfied to be placed under his protection, I bid my charming visitor good morning and returned to my duties.

Having no address I naturally called the next day to inquire if she reached home in safety. I met with a cordial reception. Herself and all the members of the family were profuse in thanks. I learned that escorted by the policeman, she reached home at 3:30. Her derangement had become known. Her entry was alike unheeded. Only at breakfast did the family hear of her strange adventure.

ABOUT ADVERTISING.—You can not eat enough in a week to last you a year, and you cannot advertise on that plan either. People that advertise only once in three months forget that most folks cannot remember anything longer than seven days. No bell can ring so loudly as a good advertisement. People will believe what they see rather than what they hear.

Quitting advertisements in dull times is like tearing out a dam because the weather is cold. Either plan will prevent good times from ever coming.

An Indian tried the softness of feathers by laying one upon a rock and stretching himself upon it. There are some who try the virtue of advertising on the same plan. It is true of advertising as of anything else in life, that if it is worth doing at all it is worth doing well.

Bread is the staff of human life, and advertising is the staff of life in trade.

The shortest way to the best.—Mamma, (to Ethel, on the way to the latter's first party) "Now, mind darling, if you see any nice things on the table that you would like to eat, you mussen't take them"—Ethel, O, no, mamma!—I'll take them.—Punch.

UNCOMPROMISING HONESTY.

The otherday a man with a gaunt look, halted before an eating-stand at the Central Market and after a long survey at the viands he said to the woman:—

"I'm a poor man, but I'll be honest if I have to be buried on Pauper's Field."

"What's the matter now?" asked the woman, regarding him with suspicion. "No one saw me pick up a $20 bill by your stand here this morning. But, as I said before, I'll be honest."

"A $20 bill—pick up!" she whispered, bringing a bland smile to her face. "I suppose," he continued, "that some one passing along here could have dropped such a bill, but it seems more reasonable to suppose that the money was lost by you."

"Don't talk quite so loud," she said as she leaned over the stand. "You are an honest man, and I'll have your name put in the papers so that all may know it. I'm a hard working widow, and if you hadn't brought back that money it would have gone hard for my children."

"If I pick up money by a stand I always give it up," he said as he sat down on one of the stools. "That's right—that's honest!" she whispered. "Draw right up here and have some breakfast."

He needed no second invitation. The way he went for that cold ham, fried sausage, biscuit and coffee was terrific to the woman. "Yes—I—um—try—to—be—honest," he said between bites.

"That's right. If I found any money belonging to you I would give it up, you bet. Don't you care for coffee?"

"Yes—care—fiddle," he said, as he jammed more ham into his mouth. "Even courtships have an ending. The old chap finally began to breathe like a foundering horse, and pretty soon after he rose from the table."

"You are good man to bring me back my money," said the woman, as she brushed away the crumbs. "Oh, I am honest," he said. "When I find any money I always give it up."

"Well, I'll take it now, please," she said as he began to button his coat. "Take what?" he asked. "The lost money you found."

"I didn't find any! I'll be honest with you, however, if ever I find any here."

"You old liar! Didn't you say you found a $20 bill here?" "No ma'am. I said that no one saw me pick up such a bill here!"

"Pay me them pervishuns," she yelled, clutching at his throat. "I'll be honest with you—I haven't a cent," he replied, as he held her off.

She tried to tip him over into a barrel of charcoal, but he broke loose, and before she recovered from her amazement he was a block away and galloping away like a stage horse.

Alone, alone! no tread of man Has passed where now my footsteps fall; The caribou and bear alone Face undisturbed these forest-halls.

Away from man, remote from trade, And all vile ways that win the dollar, How sweet is nature's lonely mood!

Ah, what is this?—A paper collar!

Dear Sir—I am sixty years of age, and have been afflicted with Salt Rheum in the worst form for a great many years, until, accidentally, I saw one of your books, which described my case exactly. I bought your Golden Medical Discovery, and took two bottles and a half, and was entirely cured. From my shoulders to my hands I was entirely covered with eruptions, and on my face and body. I was likewise afflicted with Rheumatism, so that I walked with great difficulty, and the entire cured. May God spare you a long life to remain a blessing to mankind. With untold gratitude.
