BEDTIME STORIES

Why Did Reddy Grin

Sly and crafty folk distrust. Heed them only when you must. —Old Mother Nature.

There are many visitors to the pond of Paddy the Beaver. There are few of us Green Forest folk who can travel any distance who do not visit Paddy's pond. So it is that the Beaver folk know well most of their neighbors.

"Hello, Reddy Fox," said he.

Reddy Fox makes his home in the Old Pasture that begins where the Green Forest ends. He isn't as fond of the Green Forest as are some who make it their home. But he does visit now and then and in certain seasons does a little hunting there. So Paddy was not surprised when he saw Reddy Fox standing on the shore looking over toward him. At once Paddy swam over. He wasn't afraid of Reddy. He was too big for Reddy to even think of trying to kill. He knew it and Reddy knew it. So Paddy swam in close.

"Hello, Reddy Fox," said he. "I haven't seen you before this summer. Where have you been?"

"Oh, I've been around," replied Reddy. "It is true I have not been over here much for a long time. What is the news in this part of the Green Forest?"

"There's no special news," replied Paddy. "I took a vacation, but nothing happened while I was away. Nothing much happens around here you know. The other night we heard Howler the Wolf, but he was far away on the Great Mountain and he did not come this way. Just the same hearing him gave me a same funny feeling. Little shivers ran all over me, even when I know he is so far away that there is nothing to fear from him. I guess most folks have those little shivers when they heard Howler. It's a funny thing that a voice can do that to folks when they know there's nothing to be afraid of."

"I know what you mean," said Paddy. "There is no other sound that has given me quite the same feeling excepting one we heard a few nights ago. It was an awful scream. And it gave me the shivers just as Howler's voice does. I wonder if you have ever heard it."

Reddy turned his head aside and grinned. "I wouldn't know," said he, "because you haven't told me what the scream was like."

"How can I tell you? You know perfectly well I can't scream. Even if I could scream, I don't believe I could scream like that one we heard the other night. It was awful. I never heard anything like it and I do not want to hear it again," declared Paddy.

Once more Reddy grinned, but he took care that Paddy should not see him do it. "Were you really frightened?" he asked.

Well, I was glad I was in the water and not out on the shore," said Paddy. "I wish I knew who screamed. If I knew I would feel a lot better, even though it was somebody to be afraid of."

Well, it is good to have seen you again. Now I've got to be going along," said Reddy. He turned and trotted away. He was grinning broadly.

Hydrogen Energy Will Not Be Competitive For While

LONDON (Reuters) — British physicists who are trying to harness the power of the hydrogen bomb for peaceful purposes estimate it will be many years before it can be used commercially.

Stories in British newspapers that experiments are making big progress toward the time when limitless supplies of energy will be obtained from rivers and seas disturbed uranium shares Wednesday and Thursday.

But experts think it fantasy to suggest that uranium, oil and coal power are obsolete in any foreseeable period of years.

An announcement is expected about two weeks from Britain's Harwell atomic research station on the first tests of Zeta, a machine the scientists are using in their experiments.

MAY BEAT SOVIET

Zeta may have outstripped similar Russian and American devices by producing high temperatures of perhaps 5,000,000 degrees centigrade.

But Harwell director Sir John Cockcroft said last month that for output of energy to exceed input, even experimentally, temperatures of about 50,000,000 degrees are needed.

Harwell men emphasize it is not yet established that neutrons produced by Zeta are thermonuclear, if they are, it will be a demonstration that H-power is controllable.

The Russians, however, who originally thought their neutrons from a similar device were thermonuclear, later decided they were not.

Scientists estimate that from the achievement of thermonuclear neutrons to the beginnings of commercial application may take anywhere from 15 to 40 years or more.

Find Uranium In Water Desert

WINDHOEK South West Africa AP—Huge deposits of uranium have been found in the waterless Namib desert in southwest Africa by Sir Ernest Oppenheimer's Anglo-American Corporation.

After two years of testing, news of the find was released by the Southwest's chief mines inspector, P. F. Henderson, in an interview Saturday.

Opening lead—queen of hearts.

The play known as the Grand Coup is not nearly as difficult as many players make it out to be. There is a simple rule declarer has to follow as soon as he recognizes the situation, and from that point on the play takes care of itself.

West won the first heart trick and East took the next two. East returned a diamond which was taken by the ace.

Having lost three tricks, South's only concern was to avoid the loss of a trump trick. After leading a low spade to the king, a spade was returned and the ten finessed. The finesse succeeded, but the bad trump distribution was revealed when West showed out.

The typical Grand Coup position existed. South still had a finesse position over East but there was no trump to lead from dummy to take another finesse.

The aim in such cases is to arrange the play, if possible, so that a card can be led from dummy at trick twelve and thus accomplish a finesse. For this play to be effective, declarer must reduce his trump length to the same number as East's.

Since South has four trumps at this point to East's two, he must cuff two of dummy's cards, even though they be winners. Accordingly, the jack of diamonds is led to dummy's queen and the king is trumped.

A low club is led to the queen and the ten of diamonds is ruffed. Declarer then crosses to dummy's ace of clubs.

Eleven tricks have been played. The lead is in dummy which now consists of 8-6 of clubs. East has two cards left: Q 9 of spades and a quarter on a four-yard runner.

A club is led and East must trump. Declarer makes both his trumps by virtue of the coup. He destroys East's apparently invincible trump trick.

If declarer fails to cut down his trump length and attempts merely to crash dummy's high cards, he will eventually find himself a trump-rich position and will have to be conceded a trick to East.
