September 4th, 1855.

From late American Papers.

By the Africa, arrived on Tuesday afternoon, we received Boston journals to the evening of the 31st ult. Of the news, which is of rather more than ordinary interest, we give, on other colums, a copious synopsis, including details of one of those frequently occuring and terrible accidents which might almost lead us to wish that railways and locomotives had never been invented. That pestilence—the Yellow Fever—continues to rage in Norfolk, Va., without any abatement. The Boston Evening Journal says:—

"The accounts of the ravages of the yellow fever at Norfolk on the 23d and 24th are as heart-sickening as those which we have published for several days past. It will be seen by our telegraph dispatches that the noble-hearted Mayor of the city has fallen a victim to the disease while nobly laboring for his fellow-men.—Nurses were fast pouring in and relief from all quarters was being received. A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, writing on the 24th, 1 P. M., says:

"'I cannot tell you of any abatement of the fever, though I think it has reached its climax: 220 prescriptions were put up at the dispensary yesterday, and as I told you before, there are five other apothecary establishments in the city doing a large business.'"

"The Richmond American says, that the fever is pronounced by Dr. Stone, from New Orleans, the same that afflicted that city in 1853, and to which the Creoles gave the name of la peste. The American says:

"'It seems to differ from the old type of yellow fever in manner of attack, in treatment required, and in the celerity with which the work of death is performed—many of its victims dying within a few hours of their attack. The premonitory symptoms are simply a sharp acute pain like rheumatic pain, or sometimes a paralytic shock in some part of the body. For instance, Mr. Barclay was attacked by what felt to him like a severe blow upon the right hip. Others are attacked by a sharp pain across the knuckles of the hand. Unless attended to immediately, the pain extends up the arm, or leg, and gradually over the entire body. Internal fever ensues, while the skin and extremities are icy cold. The first effort is to bring about a reaction by wrapping the patient in ice, followed by hot mustard applications; the object being to produce perspiration, which, if successful, is generally followed by a cure. Very little, if any internal medicine is needed or allowed, except perhaps a slight tonic."

A sergeant-major of the 95th writes from the Camp before Sebastopol—"We are so very close to the Russians that the men amuse themselves with the following dialogues to them, viz, 'Johnny Rush, no bona; 'black bread; Malakoff no bona, &c.; to which the Russians reply, 'Engle no bona;' but between these jokes in goes a shower of Minie balls to butter their black bread."
