A QUEER PROPOSAL.

It Came Tardily, but it Was a Model in Its Own Right, and was the Achever. An aristocratic young lady of Magdeburg, Germany, had spent some time at the country-seat of her uncle, and a young cavalier from Berlin had been paying much attention to her. Her body thought that it would be a good match for both, and affairs went on swimmingly, until the day drew near when the young lady was to return home. The nearer the day came the more disappointed were the young man and her mother at the failure of the young man to propose, and it was not until the day before the young lady was to start for home that she learned that her mother had not much use for such a "chicken-hearted son-in-law." They left on a train on the narrow-gauge railway, connecting the valley with the nearest town.

After they had gone the young man questioned the uncle why the young lady had not proposed, and he had left her not considering it proper to propose anywhere but at the young lady's home, which he intended visiting before long. This remark, however, roused his senses, and he immediately returned to the train, and he was very much surprised to find the young lady and her mother waiting for him. He was very much surprised to find the young lady and her mother waiting for him. He was very much surprised to find the young lady and her mother waiting for him.

INDUSTRIES IN JAPAN

VARIOUS PRODUCTS EXPORTED AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Cheap Hugs Made by CHEER—The Japs as Paper-Makers, Rice and Tobacco Growers—Meat, as a Food, is Seldom Used—Their Foreign Commerce.

People marvel at the cheapness of the Japanese rugs, which have been thrown on the market in such quantities during the last two or three years. The secret of it is that they are made in Japan, and the laborers employed in their manufacture are children. This is a new industry in the Empire of the Mikado, and the center of it is the city of Osaka. The carpets are all patterns and of every length and width. Many of them are most excellent imitations of Turkish and Egyptian rugs. The materials employed are hemp and cotton.

The United States Consul at Osaka says in a letter addressed to the Department of State, that all of these carpets are made by children. In the low-studded and ill-lighted rooms of the Japanese houses troops of little boys and girls work at this dusty trade all day long. The little workmen and workwomen are almost all the standard of modesty in Japan, being different from that which is accepted in the United States, even for grown people. The workers get from 3 cents to 10 cents a day, which is pretty good pay in the Orient. Wages vary with the intelligence and aptitude of the young employees. Most of the rugs and carpets have a pattern, and are very strong, and are used for a surprising variety of uses. It is made from the best of three species of plants, which are known as "mitsumata," "koko," and "gampi."

These plants grow in soil that is unsuitable for other purposes, and for this reason paper-growing is important to the agricultural interests of several large districts. From paper, the Japanese make their imitations of leather for walls, as well as heavy oil-papers, which to an extent serve as a substitute for oil-cloth. It is said that the consumption of paper in the measure of the civilization of a people, and so it means something to say that the Japanese use about 50,000,000 pounds of paper annually for their own purposes.

The consumption of tobacco in Japan is enormous. In that country the women, as well as the men, are great smokers. The tobacco is light, yellow in color and has a sweet taste. Owing to the cheapness of labor in the fields, it is sold at a low price, and a good deal of it is exported to England and Hong Kong, and the United States. Cotton-growing is a rapidly developing industry in Japan. Textile manufactures are being turned out at a great rate in the Mikado's realm. Indian cotton fabrics can no longer compete with the Japanese. The Japanese imitate all European novelties, and improve on them. Foreign goods have no protection there against patent infringements. Even Europe is out of the race as to textile goods. Good cotton underclothes are sold in Japan for 84 cents a dozen, and cotton umbrellas are on the market at $2.00 a dozen.

Next to little fish for food in Japan, and it is eaten only in the military service. Only in recent years have oxen been killed for food, though hitherto they have been used as pack animals. In the past, the Japanese have largely as draft animals. During 1894 only 3,000 oxen, 5,293 horses, 5,468 mules, and 443 sheep were slaughtered for food in Tokio, the capital city, which has 1,900,000 inhabitants. The Japanese eat their own meat, and the few hundreds killed annually for foreigners are all imported from China.

The staple food of the Japanese is rice, which is compressed into small cakes, and is eaten after being cooked. When re-cooked by the soldiers in the field it expands to form the staple compressed bulk. If no convenience for cooking are handy, it may be cut up and eaten without further treatment. In the rations of Japanese soldiers, of fish and animal meats are prohibited elements. While the Japanese at large are vegetarians, the soldiers eat meat regularly, and at every garrison town in Japan cattle are slaughtered for the soldiers. The Japanese eat their own salmon, and this fish is furnished to the soldiers when they are at home. People in that country are extremely fond of pickles, and in this shape many poisonous salts scattered among the pockets connected in series, ought to do the business. They would probably weigh 500 pounds or more, and to this may be added the weight of heat apparatus. The latter need not necessarily be in the form of a street car heater; it could be spread out over 200 yards, and be used for heating, for instance, to carry a box-shaped heater across the stomach. Care must be taken to prevent short-circuiting, which might result in roasting to death.

Quite Possible. A correspondent asks if it is not practicable for a person in Japan to save electricity and use it for the purpose of heating the body by means of electric heating apparatus placed under the clothing. He answers that it is. A few 200 ampere-hour cells scattered among the pockets connected in series, ought to do the business. They would probably weigh 500 pounds or more, and to this may be added the weight of heat apparatus. The latter need not necessarily be in the form of a street car heater; it could be spread out over 200 yards, and be used for heating, for instance, to carry a box-shaped heater across the stomach. Care must be taken to prevent short-circuiting, which might result in roasting to death.
