

CUS TO HAVE REBIRTH?

OTTAWA (CUP) - The creation of a new national student organization is receiving serious consideration from student councils across the country and may come to fruition at a conference of student politicians to be held at the University of Windsor some time in May.

The decision to hold the conference was made at a meeting of student council representatives during the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada's annual meeting in early November. The primary reasons for the May meeting are to talk about the problems of student aid and university financing.

The proposal to form the new national student organization comes from the student council at Queen's University in Kingston and has already received support from at least one other student council — the University of Saskatchewan at Regina.

Patrick Riley, President of the Queen's student council said in an interview that there was a need for "some kind of official body to make representations to the Federal Government and the Council of Ministers of Education about the problems of student assistance."

Cost-sharing arrangements between the provincial and federal governments on the financing of post-secondary education are being renegotiated this year and student leaders apparently feel that there is a necessity for a co-ordinated campaign to present student viewpoints.

Canada has been without a national student organization since the dissolution of the Canadian Union of Students in the Fall of 1969. CUS' death was precipitated by the withdrawal of a number of student councils which were unhappy about its political bias.

Riley said he hoped any new national student organization would confine its activities to matters "directly related to students' lives", but added that he didn't know how such an organization could be prevented from taking stands on wider-ranging political issues.

"We can only hope that the people running such an organization realize their limits," he said.

Sports

It's time for the big game. It's a vitally important game that you will have to win to stay on top of the league. You have to win it — at all costs.

Go out onto the ice and keep an eye on your check. If he goes near the puck, line him up for a shot against the boards. Make sure the ref doesn't see you slip the butt of your stick into his groin. Give him a good shot. Punish him.

You've got to hate him to win! Onto the basketball court. When the ref isn't looking, see if you can wrench your opponents knee and maybe tear a few of the ligaments. Don't worry about the hoop, it's not important. To win the game, you've got to be mean.

Make the game into an awe-inspiring spectacle for the fans. Show them that you're powerful enough to rub your opponent through the crap. This makes for good entertainment and a fun time.

Run the score up, rub it in some more. Dirty opponent! You're going to sweat for this one.

Back on the ice again. You take your check into the boards and grind your stick across his head. You take a penalty.

You're being unnecessarily rough, says the ref. What, me, you say. How was I supposed to know that his head would get in the way of my stick? I'm innocent.

Go to the penalty box and sit it out. Luckily your team is ahead so this isn't an important penalty.

Now the game is over and you've won it. Go and shake your opponent's hand, and tell him you enjoyed playing against him.

What's this? He won't shake your hand. Oh, well, he's just a poor sport.

Get off the ice and into the dressing room.

Then try to become a human again.
