Pope Urges Canadians To Stay On Farms

VATICAN CITY, (Reuters)—The Pope Wednesday urged Canadian farmers to remain on the farm instead of swarming into cities and asserting that immigrants should be settled on the land rather than in cities.

The pontiff made his appeal in a letter written on his behalf by Msgr. Giovanni Batista Montini, Papal prosecretary of state, and published here Wednesday.

It was addressed to Cardinal Paul Emile Leger, archbishop of Montreal, and Cardinal James McGuigan, archbishop of Toronto, in connection with the 31st French-language session of the Canadian Catholic social week opening at Fort Laurier today and the second English-language session of the week starting at London, Ont., next Sunday.

Under the influence of industrial progress, the letter said, "Canada, like many other countries, experiences today a sad exodus from the fields to the cities."

"Vast areas of cultivable land are therefore waiting to be tilled and, in some regions at least, soil already cultivated has been abandoned by its occupants."

"This situation is not only harmful for Canada's economy but also contrary to the moral and religious well-being of the population."

"The Pope, who has often warned against the dangers of overgrowing in cities, has called on farmers not to lose in the cities, which often offer only disillusionment, their hard won savings and often also their health, strength, joy and the honor of their souls."

MISTRUST OUTDATED
On the problem of immigration, the letter said: "Some historic circumstances which might have justified certain reactions of mistrust and suspicion regarding immigrants are at present out of date."

"On the other hand, the thought that the immigrant of today will tomorrow be an active element of the moral and spiritual well being of the national community must serve as an additional stimulus for a comprehensive attitude in which faith and charity combine with a correctly understood love of one's country."

This spirit, the letter said, should guide Canadian Catholics' attitude towards immigrants regardless of differences in character, education and culture.

A similar spirit, it said, should lead them to favor the settlement of immigrants on the land rather than in the cities.

7 Return From Hunter's Paradise

MONTREAL, (CP)—Seven Montreal men returned from a week in "hunter's paradise" Tuesday with a bag of 35 deer and about 30 ducks.

The hunters found the game on Anticosti island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Albert Rakovsky, one of the hunters, estimated there are about 100,000 deer on the island. The season deer limit on the island is five for each hunter.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

(Continued from Yesterday) It was a gold circle of intricate design and workmanship, with little spaces and pockets so held nine gems, so that the whole arrangement formed a mermaid figure. The pawnbroker looked mildly interested. He put a loupe to his eye and examined the curious thing for several silent moments.

This is what he saw: Two of the little pockets or spaces were empty, which left only seven gems in the setting. They were: a blue sapphire, a diamond, a white sapphire, a topaz, an emerald, an amethyst and a catseye. The ring bore no inside inscription, not even a gold content mark, and the metal was handworked. Shafer noted too, that all the stones had been mined in European style, though very old.

He also observed, through his loupe, that only one of the stones was really valuable. It was the catseye. Evertime he turned it in his hand it resembled a real catseye opening and shutting, hence the name.

Finally Shafer removed the glass from his eye and asked the salt "What's your price on this?" The man did not appear to hear the pawnbroker's question but went off on an incoherent lot of talk about pretty women and bad luck, and what not, till Shafer broke in "Where did you come by this ring?" thinking maybe it was hot and dangerous to handle at any price. Shafer took a good look at the sea dog and thought he saw a streak of guilt cross the fellow's face. "I didn't steal it if that's what you mean. I bought that ring in Hong Kong six years ago. Wish to God I'd left it there, though. It's bad luck and I want to get rid of it. In fact, the fellow I bought it from warned me never to give it to a woman or else—"

"Oh else what?" asked Shafer a smile playing with his mouth. "She'd die suddenly like that," and the second customer snapped his fingers to show how quickly death would come to any woman unlucky enough to possess the strange ring.

"If you buy it, promise me you'll never give it to any woman, though she should offer you ten times its value. The ring is bad luck, very bad luck. You saw that catseye didn't you?"

"Yes, of course," said Shafer. "That's why I am interested in the ring in the first place. Otherwise—"

When I bought it," interrupted the seaman, it had three catseyes. The first girl I gave it to was a cute little French girl in Marselles. That night she died and one of the catseyes was missing. Her landlady handed me back the ring and told me I'd better blow. I tried to sell the ring to a French seaman, but the deal fell through. They have all these six year. That's why I am willing to sell it to you dirt cheap. Savvy? It's a valuable ring, Mr. but since it brought me so much bad luck, I must get rid of it."

"I don't believe a word of your story," Shafer told the fellow. "I think it's hot but I'll give you $1 for it. What do you say?"

The seaman seemed not to hear. The second time, he went on, "I gave the ring to an Egyptian girl in Port Said. She too died suddenly and — I took the ring off her finger and hurried back to my ship. I ought to have left the thing with her but somehow I just couldn't get away from it. When

One Death As Home For Poor Burns At Truro

TRURO (CP) — In less than three hours Wednesday fire whipped through the three-storey Colchester municipal poor home near here, causing the death of one resident and forcing evacuation of 100 others.

Breaking out early in the morning, the flames jumped from the basement to the attic up an air vent and quickly were out of control.

Lack of water hampered firemen who almost reached the lone victim just before he fell back into his room, his clothing ablaze. He was identified as Ira Millard of nearby Tatamagouche.

Attendants roused the other residents and escorted them from the burning building. One man was carried out on his cot and 11 others had to be assisted.

The hospital commission called an emergency meeting and requested that it be allowed use of the hospital building at nearby

I looked at the ring the second catseye was missing. I know it sounds fantastic, but I swear that every word I've told you is true."

"Who is that girl with the guitar in her hands — I mean the one dressed in the green blouse and wearing dungarees? Whoever she is she keeps pretty close tabs on you, sailor," said Shafer.

"Oh, that's Rama," said the man of the curious ring, "the Egyptian girl I've been telling you about. She's dead, but she still keeps following me about."

"What a liar you are," laughed Shafer. "Here's a dollar for that bad luck ring of yours, now blow, and let me look up for the night. But where's the girl?"

"Disappeared as usual," said the man of the ring. "She comes and goes like that. One gets used to it."

Shafer never sold that ring to anyone, not even his wife could coax it out of him as a gift. Why? Well, one reason was that Shafer was a bit superstitious like the rest of us, so he had the ring made into a flashy stickpin with the third catseye mounted in its center and Shafer was wearing the catseye stickpin the day they found him dead in his little shop.
