

GARRABALDI AND ROME.

Garribaldi, we are told, is preparing a deacon upon Rome, and the enemies of the papacy are quite confident that this time a final end will be made of the temporal sovereignty of the Holy See.

We have no confidence in the good will of the Florentine Government, and even less in the Emperor of the French. The abolition of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope is a Napoleonic idea, and the Emperor's policy from the first has tended to that end.

The Italian Government cannot, however, allow Mazzini and Garribaldi to carry out their plans, for they are nearly as hostile to it as they are to the Pope.

We remember reading a short time since of a Catholic Sovereign, one of the German Princes, who, being in a gallery or tribune of a London chapel, was provided with a richly-cushioned bench to kneel on.

THE TOOTHACHE.

We have met in the course of our life seven or eight individuals who have never had the toothache. Blatant ignorance! May their shadows never grow less!

It is a fact—the fact that the theory of Copernicus is now not scientifically unlikely, but, on the contrary, a scientifically established truth.

No book issued of late years has attracted so much attention from the press on both sides of the Atlantic as the life of Prince Albert, or the "Queen's Book," as it is more commonly called.

Nothing more remarkable has made its appearance in the literature of the time, than the "Life of Prince Albert," professedly written in great part for the Queen of England, but in much the larger part by the work of her own hand.

Her resolution will be of more service in teaching the beauty of maternal devotion than all the homilies that might be written.

We remember reading a short time since of a Catholic Sovereign, one of the German Princes, who, being in a gallery or tribune of a London chapel, was provided with a richly-cushioned bench to kneel on.

THE VOYAGE OF THE DUNDERBERG.

It appears from the account given by a correspondent of the New York Herald, that the voyage of the ram Dunderberg from New York to Cherbourg, France, was a pleasant one to those on board, although the weather during the passage was unusually severe for the season.

The prevailing winds were from the west and south-west, sometimes amounting to fresh gales, subjecting the ship to high cross and following seas, which were also occasionally forward of the beam, and by which her buoyancy and steadiness were fully tested.

INTOLERANCE IN SWEDEN.—A newspaper correspondent writes that religious exclusiveness is still maintained in full force in Sweden.

The New York Herald strongly urges upon the President the absolute necessity of a general amnesty to the whites and blacks of the south.

The Antigonish Casket says that the potato blight has made its appearance to a fearful extent in that county.

Galileo was neither tortured nor cruelly treated; all the accounts of his sufferings are calumnies.
