Ellen's Diary

Near-East... Of Syria "where my mother still is — and my father is dead" of Lebanon in Palestine "where when I grow I come to live with my sister— and work... in garage. Yes, I am very good mechanic and how do you say it? Yes" with a brilliant smile "carpenter" and which because of unfriendly races dwelling there, is in a state of continuous unrest. And were the cedars there? and the little farms? And the vineyards? And was it not a beautiful land? "Oh yes, but hot" ... and when you are in grave danger of being shot by one faction or another "too exciting altogether!"

And dinner preparations suspended, we were soon inspecting —and making odd selections from his store in the bowels of the truck, missing it is true the bright or more enticing items of the long syne. And granddaughter, sensing the presence of an intriguing caller, hurried up to enjoy a first sight of a peddler's "pack." James came by too, doubtless recalling his fear of such foreign tradesmen in childhood. Yet with all with obvious interest. The younger farmer also strolled along, maybe curious to see if jackknives and Jew's harps and mouth-organs were still items in the collection. Jeanie as well to smile eagerly and remember "it was always an occasion at home when a peddler called. And how spell-bound we children were to see the wealth and variety of his wares!" Notwithstanding James' passing comment "You're as simple as the crows, Ellen!" We bought odd trinkets as did Jeanie, we to make up in part for the colorful purchases we would have made from those of this itinerant profession in our childhood years. . . . . "Snowflurries tomorrow," a forecast is now coming in, mingling with the crackle of tonight's fire, the singing of the tea-kettle, the purr of one of granddaughter's cats. "Well now" James comments, thoughts going out, we suspect, to the youngest piglets that to find comfort must cuddle well beside their dams this cool night "Did you ever hear worse than that, Ellen?"
