GEOLOGISTS BELIEVE THERE ARE DIAMOND DEPOSITS IN CANADA

NEW YORK, (CP)—Somewhere in Canada there probably are diamond deposits waiting for someone who wants to take the time and trouble to find them. So runs the theory of a number of United States geologists, none of whom can find the time to go diamond hunting any more of whom wish they could.

Canada's best-known link with the diamond industry is Dr. John Williamson of Montreal, who went to Tanganyika in East Africa 14 years ago and made millions by discovering a great diamond "pipe" there.

But ever since diamonds first fished from river beds in the northern United States nearly 100 years ago, geologists have speculated that the deposits from which they came, potentially worth millions of dollars, were located in Canada.

CARRIED BY GLACIERS

These gems have been found in Ohio, Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan. Dr. A. E. Alexander, geologist at the New York diamond house of Tiffany and Company, estimates their total value at 200,000.

Geologists believe these loose diamonds were carried from Canada by glacial drift during the ice age. One geologist, W. H. Hobbs studied a glacial path to one spot where diamonds were found and surmised that they came from somewhere in the James bay area.

That still left plenty of room for search. Periodically, the basic igneous rock in which diamonds are found, is believed to be present over wide areas of the Labrador shield in northeastern Canada. But just as the discovery of quartz is no guarantee that it contains gold, a prospector can go through a lot of peridotite before he comes up with a diamond.

Furthermore, not all the experts are convinced that the original Canadian deposits are still intact. David M. Seaman, a mineralogist at New York's American Museum of Natural History, says they may all have been scattered by the glaciers, which gouged out the earth in places to a depth of hundreds of feet.

WOULD PAN STREAMS

But Seaman still is inclined to the view that valuable deposits still exist in the North. If he were to prospect for them, he says, he would start out by panning streams, much as the sourdoughs did during the Klondike gold rush.

Seaman believes that because of their weight, diamonds caught in a stream would either sink to the bottom or wash to the bank. By straining sand through a wire mesh in a brook near a peridotite area, a prospector might be able to spot a sparkling gem.

If a prospector got nowhere by panning streams, Seaman says, he might try drilling, using a big bore capable of removing large sections of earth. Under a fluorescent lamp, any diamonds present would reflect blue light.

The difficulty of finding the right kind of rock structure would be one of the greatest obstacles to any search for diamonds in the North. Study has revealed that the existence of certain rocks may be determined from the air by observing foliage characteristics. Seaman says that eventually somebody may hit upon such a method for determining peridotite areas.

ing was taken up by Mrs. Charles Fraser.

To round out the evening some special films were shown, and much enjoyed by the audience and children. The Children's depicted the aid given by many countries of the world through UNESCO to those children in dire straits through starvation and disease in foreign lands.

"The House I Live In" featuring Frank Sinatra, showed a group of young lads coming to a better understanding of each other, in spite of religious differences. The Story of Koula" was an entrancing story of a Greek boy's way with an Arkansas mule, the gift of UNESCO to a struggling farmer and his family.

U. S.—TURKEY TRADE

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States Tuesday announced an agreement to provide Turkey with about 500,000 tons of grain to replenish shortages caused by recent crop failures. The announcement said the U. S. will give Turkey about 100,000 tons of wheat in exchange for chrome. Another 400,000 tons will be provided with foreign aid funds and an additional 300,000 tons of wheat and feed grains will be sold by the Commodity Credit Corporation for Turkish lira.

Men's Association Dinner Meeting

The guest speaker at the regular dinner meeting of the men's Association of Trinity United Church, Montague on Monday evening was Mr. Ches Cooper, president of the Men's Association of Trinity United Church, Charlottetown.

Mr. Cooper, who was introduced by Mr. J. E. Cudmore, spoke on "radio programming." He gave an interesting insight into the work involved and the people concerned with the preparation and presentation of a radio program. Mr. C. A. Shaw conveyed the thanks of the Association to the speaker.

The business period was conducted by the president, Mr. G. Arnold Wightman. There were thirty-nine members present.

Mr. Gordon Coffin, chairman of the ways and means committee, reported that it has been decided to sponsor a play to be presented the latter part of the month by the Charlottetown Little Theatre Guild. A roast beef dinner was served by the ladies of the church, and the meeting concluded with the usual enjoyable sing-song led by Mr. Gordon Coffin with Mrs. J. M. Fraser, pianist.
