

Soviets Aimed At Kidnapping Of British MP

LONDON (AP) — Information has reached Britain that the Soviet intelligence service, the KGB, planned to seize a Conservative member of Parliament on a trumped-up charge in Moscow last July. The Sunday Telegraph says.

It says there is evidence the KGB intended to detain Cmdr Anthony Courtney during a visit to Moscow on business as an export consultant. He was to have been held incommunicado while negotiations were made to exchange him for imprisoned Soviet spies Morris and Lola Cohen, alias Kroger, both Americans, or George Blake, a Briton.

The Telegraph says the KGB had been keeping tabs on Courtney during previous visits to Moscow and had put cameras and other secret recording devices in his hotel room.

Courtney was to have gone to Moscow again in July but cancelled the trip.

The paper says copies of a scurrilous and defamatory sheet prepared by the KGB concerning Courtney have reached London and it is believed the sheets were to be used as the second phase of a plot to discredit him.

In July he put forward a motion in Parliament assailing the "habitual abuse of diplomatic privileges for espionage purposes" by Soviet and other Soviet-bloc embassies in London.
