HOME RULE DEBATE.

THE SUMMING UP

Speeches by Balfour and Gladstone.

The despatches report great excitement in the House of Commons and throughout Great Britain on the second reading of the Home Rule Bill.

Mr. Balfour rose shortly before 11 o'clock on the evening of Friday last. A longer period had never been occupied with the second reading of a bill, he said, than had been allowed for the present debate. No man had, however, dared contend that within the narrow limits of the two islands four assemblies, with four executives, could be operative in harmony with one imperial parliament. He himself could not believe that this childish imitation of the United States constitution would ever commend itself to the judgment of the British people. The Home Rule bill has been brought forward to meet the liberal party's necessities, which were connected with Irish agitation and Irish crime. (Hear, hear.) Never had such an important constitutional change been proposed with such flimsy reasons. Substantial arguments for the necessity of the measure could be enumerated on the fingers of one hand. Two of these arguments were that the union had failed and that coercion had failed. Mr. Balfour argued at length to prove that coercion in Ireland had been productive of beneficent results, and that under the last Salisbury cabinet the island was becoming tranquil. Agrarian crime in Ireland, he said, was a national disease of ancient growth. It was not a product of the union. Agrarian crime began before the union, and after the union it had to be treated with the methods long used against it. Under the union agrarian crime had decreased.

Mr. Balfour was interrupted by confusion among the Irish members, and upon resuming repeated with emphasis that agrarian crime in Ireland was at its worst before the union. This statement evoked shouts of "No," "False" and "Shame" from the Irishmen.

Proceeding, Mr. Balfour said it was madness to look forward with the expectation of seeing agrarian crime stamped out in the immediate future. Under wise legislation in recent years the crime has decreased in virulence. (Hear, hear.) There was still much to be done for the Irish tenant farmer, but the evils to be remedied were the result of the union. Since Ireland had been united with England, the condition of both Irish farmer and Irish laborer had improved immensely. It was absurd to hold England responsible for Ireland's woes, although it might be admitted that England sometimes had played a sorry part toward her sister country. Who could but feel disgusted with the creeping hypocrisy of the men, who, although aware of the history of Ireland, threw upon England the responsibility for Irish wrongs.

Mr. Balfour contended that Ireland as a nation had never had a parliament. Those classes who had had a parliament in Ireland did not now desire a parliament. (Cheers.) If the Government in their madness gave Ireland a parliament they would be granting the country something that she never before possessed. The government had given no answer to the argument that Home Rule would inflict injustice upon the British taxpayers. Nor had any minister dropped a word as to the military-geographical aspect of separation. Then what had been decided about securing the interests of the British creditor? Everybody knew that the so-called supremacy of the British Parliament would be only a paper supremacy. The Irish would have the real and the British the illusory supremacy. Mr. Balfour described the bill as a decisive step towards separation. To make it law, he said, would lead ultimately to the disintegration of the empire. He next discussed the financial aspect of the bill. Its proposal, he said, not only was ungenerous, but would drive Ireland to bankruptcy.

Mr. Balfour justified his recent speeches before the Unionist leaders, and said that in 1886 the present prime minister had said it was a matter of honor to protect the landlords from confiscation of their estates, but in this bill this matter of honor had been forgotten. The bill, if passed, would entail loss and hardship upon all classes in Ireland. Irish ambitions would centre in the new Dublin parliament. Irishmen would regard the Imperial Parliament as a foreign and defeated body. The Irish people would drink from the bitter and polluted stream of Irish history instead of the pure stream of English history. (Laughter.) If you commit this great political crime, said Mr. Balfour in closing, you make yourselves responsible for an irreparable national disaster, and all hopes of a peaceful and united Ireland will vanish forever.

Prolonged cheers and counter-cheers followed. As Mr. Gladstone rose to address the House the cheering was renewed. Like Mr. Balfour, he was in splendid form, the principal weapons of opposition, he said, were in his assertion, persistent exhortation, constant misconstruction and copious, arbitrary and baseless prophecies. Thus there were conflicting financial arrangements to be dealt with, but among the difficulties nothing existed which ought to abash or terrify men desirous to accomplish a great object. For the first time in sixty years the bill would secure the supremacy of parliament as founded upon right, as well as backed by power. The Irish leaders had accepted the bill in good faith. The opposition had evaded steadfastly the real question of the second reading. How must Ireland be governed if this bill be rejected? Lord Salisbury had asked for twenty years of coercion, but as the policy of converting Ireland to Protestantism, inaugurated under Queen Elizabeth, had failed down to the present time, what ground was there for hope that in but twenty years more it would succeed? The late government had started with a majority of 120. Neither the children nor grandchildren of this generation would see such a majority again. Yet the whole fabric of their policy had failed, and what guarantee was there that it would not fail again? The present bill sought to close a controversy that had lasted for centuries. Under its provisions Ireland would start on a new basis with all the recollections of the past effaced.

Everything hitherto demanded by Ireland had been refused because she was viewed with distrust and disbelief. Her loyal acceptance of the present bill should cause distrust and disbelief to vanish. There had been no disaffection of the Irish mind since the door of hope had been opened. The persistent distrust of the Irish people, despite all they could do, came simply to this, that they were to be pressed below the level of civilized mankind. It is now acknowledged on every hand that the British constitution was given to the British people, was Ireland alone to be excepted from its blessings? To deny Ireland Home Rule was to say that she lacked the ordinary faculties of humanity. Mr. Gladstone's closing words were: "You cannot be surprised that we have undertaken the solution of this great question, and, as on the one hand, it is not the least of the arduous efforts of the liberal party; so, on the other hand, it will have its place in history—aye, and not remote, but early history, as not the least durable, fruitful and blessed among its accomplished acts."

A Blast From Johnston's River.

DEAR SIR,—It is somewhat pleasing to notice that Johnston's River has at last been aroused from its dormancy by the pedantic quill of "Gerrymander," who, in a manner becoming only to that of an ostentatious prognosticator, places before the public a few little passing incidents in a highly magnified form, unworthy the pen of any other individual save that of this mordacious nectolops of whose existence—up to the issue of THE EXAMINER of the 14th inst.—nothing was previously known otherwise than by reputation. But having now become aware of the fact that this individual has appeared in our midst, our young people, both male and female, should exercise the greatest care over their actions in order that nothing may occur to arouse or excite into action this scholastic annotator who, judging from the flattering praise bestowed upon our worthy violinist, is in every sense of the word a true harmonist—give the mark.

What appears most strange in, why Messrs. McKenna, Dominic Smith and S. McWade should have attracted the attention of "Gerrymander" so forcibly, I should not be surprised, when "Gerrymander" next appears, to notice Mr. Pius Smith, our energetic young blacksmith of the village, in the list of victims.

However necessary it might appear to "Gerrymander," it was rather a touch of the unastory to comment upon the advice of Greeley irrespective of persons or sex, in as much as injury was not sufficient without adding insult to it. Gerrymander! Rather than again appear under false colors adopt the sage advice yourself, and though at present your admirers may be plenty your mourners will be few.

It seems as if "Gerrymander" is somewhat demoted over the state and appearance of our schoolroom, a building which is sufficiently large in every respect to contain twice as many children as are at present in the district. Notably its outward appearance may have become a little faded in color owing no doubt to an atmospheric change that has taken place since the grits obtained power. However, at no distant date, an election will be held to elect members to rule the affairs of our island for the next four years, and it is to be hoped the candidates who will offer to represent the grits will receive what we intend to give our schoolroom next summer—a whitewash.

Though already occupying too much of your valuable space, probably it would not be out of place to mention that our wharf at Red Point is again showing great signs of decay, and if not attended to by the Government this coming season and put in a passable state of repair, great will be the clamor of the surrounding district. Further, it is to be regretted that the Government cannot be impressed with the necessity of having the steamer that runs up the East River to call at Red Point wharf during this season of the year when the roads are almost impassable.

RESIDENT.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS Mr. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used by millions of mothers for their children while cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as bright as a button. It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best-known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Iyr

Some Meet With Trials and Disappointments When Buying.

BE NOT DECEIVED.

See That You Get Paine's Celery Compound.

Men and women who endure the tortments and agonies of rheumatism, liver and kidney troubles, dyspepsia, nervousness, sleeplessness and neuralgia have sufficient to contend against without being subjected to other severe trials and disappointments.

It is now acknowledged on every hand that sufferers from the above mentioned diseases have a deliverer in Paine's Celery Compound—a medicine that never fails to bring relief and cure. The disappointments that the afflicted meet with from time to time are wholly due to the influence of those who are actuated by degrading and mercenary motives. When Paine's Celery Compound is asked for, by sufferers or their friends, the storekeeper will often prevail upon the buyer to take some other medicine, which he assures them is just as good. There is no other medicine in the world that can for a moment compare with Paine's Celery Compound for curing the diseases just referred to. The dealer tries to sell some other preparation simply because it pays a big, round profit. It is in this way that hundreds are misled and kept on in suffering and agony.

We believe it is only necessary to warn the public, so that they may be on their guard when buying. When you ask for Paine's Celery Compound do not be persuaded to take any other medicine. If you cannot get what you ask for at once, go to some one who is always ready to sell what is wanted. Honest merchants are plentiful, so that there is no necessity of submitting to greedy and dishonest men who care not for your condition of health. Paine's Celery Compound means new life, vigor and extended years.
