ENGLISH OFFICE SEEKERS.

A Parliamentary Candidate Is Allowed a Certain Latitude of Independence.

Let us suppose that the Birmingham Liberal Association, for instance, is anxious to secure a candidate to contest one of the parliamentary divisions of the city. The members of the committee, most of them solid business men, who are in politics "for their health," and who neither ask for nor desire any reward, meet to discuss the situation. If it happens that any local Liberal of prominence and good standing is available, an invitation is sent to him to stand for the constituency. If not, a conference is held with the central association in London, on whose books are the names of most of the aspiring Liberals in the country. The candidate arrives in Birmingham and issues his address to the electors. Here, again, one notices a contrast with the cast iron rigidity of the American system. A candidate for congress or a state governorship is supposed to have no private opinions whatever. He is put forward as the party's representative and has to swallow the party's programme, whether he likes or not. An English candidate is not called upon to sacrifice so much to his country's welfare. He is allowed a certain latitude of independence. Our Birmingham candidate, for instance, knows, of course, what are the main tenets of the Liberal faith, but he need not necessarily subscribe to all its articles. With the gregarious instinct of politicians, the odds are that he will not differ from them on any material point. But he may, and still be the party candidate. He makes his own little platform and runs on it to suit himself.—Chautauquan.

A Virginian Country Store.

A glance at the walls and the show-cases made it plain that one store was enough for the village, writes Bradford Torrey in The Atlantic. You had only to ask for "that you wanted—a shotgun, a revolver, a violin case, a shovel, a plug of tobacco, a pound of sugar, a coffeepot, a dress pattern, a ribbon, a necktie, a pair of trousers, or what not. The place was like a beehive; customers of both sexes and both colors going and coming with a ceaseless buzz of gossip and bargaining, while the proprietor and his clerks—two of them smoking cigarettes—bustled to and fro behind the counters, improving the shining hour. One strapping young colored man standing near me inquired for suspenders, and, on being shown them, selected without hesitation (it is a good customer who knows his own mind) a brilliant yellow pair embroidered or edged with equally brilliant red. And having bought them at an outlay of 12 cents, he proceeded to the piazza, where he took off his coat and put them on. That was what he had bought them for. His taste was impressionistic, I thought. He believed in the primary colors.

More Than Laconic.

"Henrietta," said Mr. Meekton, "you know you said almost two hours ago you were going to tell me just how much you thought the average man amounted to."

She turned upon him a look of silent inquiry.

"You have said absolutely nothing since then."

"Well," she answered, "that's what I think he amounts to."—Washington Star.

To clarify vinegar and even muddy wine pour into a bottle of it half a teacupful of fresh, sweet milk and let the whole stand for 24 hours. As the sediment will settle to the bottom with the curdled milk the clear liquid may then be poured off into another bottle.

POPULAR WRITERS.

Personal Notoriety Has Little to Do With an Author's Success.

Personal publicity, the sort that comes from the distribution of biographical details and the publication of likenesses, may be commercially useful to some purveyors of public entertainment, but it seems probable that there has been an overestimation of its value to the makers of books. One of the most popular books ever written was "Alice in Wonderland." Its distribution must have been enormous and doubtless it still goes vigorously on, but who had ever seen a likeness of the man who wrote it? When Dr. Dodgson died the other day and the newspapers told who he was and what title he had to be held in grateful memory, thousands of his debtors identified him for the first time as Lewis Carroll, the author of the immitable stories that are almost as familiar to contemporary children as "Mother Goose." Dr. Dodgson liked peace and a quiet life and very cordially disliked notoriety. Like many wise people, he found great pleasure and recreation in the companionship of nice children, and for their amusement he concocted two of the queerest and most original and delightful books that ever were written. But he never considered that merely because his books became famous there was any need that he should become famous too.

No modest author need hesitate to produce a masterpiece or even a popular novel (which need not be a masterpiece and usually isn't one) for fear that his success will involve the sacrifice of a reasonable privacy. His book must be published if its worth is to be fairly tested, but that he should be published, too, is not at all indispensable. If he chooses not to have his likeness run in the advertising columns of the newspapers, he can keep it out, and his book won't suffer; if he prefers that his personal idiosyncrasies and circumstances should not be discussed, that, too, can be accomplished in great measure without much trouble. The only things the public absolutely requires from writers in exchange for their favors are ideas and good writing. Everything else is thrown in and may in most cases be easily and safely withheld.—"The Point of View" in Scribner's.

Without a Peer—Works Miracles

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart is without a peer. This great remedy relieves instantly the most aggravated and distressing forms of heart disease. It is the surest and quickest acting formula for heart trouble known to medical science, and thousands of times has the hand of the grim destroyer been stayed by its use. If there is palpitation, shortness of breath, pain in the left side, smothering sensations don't delay, or you may be counted in the long list of those who have gone over to the great majority, because the best remedy in the world today was not promptly used. Sold by Dr. S. W. Dodd and Geo. E. Hug.
