THE DAILY EXAMINER.

OCTOBER 27, 1897.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

On receipt of Hon. Mr. Peters' resignation, this forenoon, His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor immediately called upon Hon. Mr. Warburton to form a new administration. The task was immediately undertaken, and at three o'clock this afternoon the new Administration was sworn in. It is composed of—

Hon. A. B. Warburton, E. A., D. C. L., Premier.

Hon. H. C. McDonald, Attorney-General.

Hon. J. R. McLean, Commissioner of Public Works.

Hon. Angus McMillan, Commissioner of Crown Lands and Provincial Secretary-Treasurer.

Without portfolio:—

Hon. J. W. Richards, Bideford.

Hon. B. Rogers, Charlottetown.

Hon. P. McNutt, Malpeque.

Hon. Anthony McLaughlan, St. Peter's. One seat in the new Cabinet remains unfilled. The new Attorney-General only will have to go to the country for reelection.

MR. PETERS' RESIGNATION.

MR. PETERS waited upon His Honor Lieutenant Governor Howland this forenoon and delivered up the seals of his office as Premier and Attorney-General of the Province. We have not yet heard that he has resigned his seat in the Legislative Assembly. But, practically, he is out of politics. This is a fact upon which we may congratulate both Mr. Peters and the public at large. Mr. Peters is not naturally a politician; and his training has been rather that of a lawyer than a statesman. He cannot have had unalloyed enjoyment throughout the period in which he has been at the head of the Government, and we feel sure that he will be glad to escape from the position of Premier, influential though it is and powerful in it as he has proved himself to be. Upon the other hand, the people at large will rejoice that an administration which must ever be associated in their minds with public debt and public taxation is no more. At the same time, we feel assured that they bear Mr. Peters no personal ill-will and that they will unite with THE EXAMINER in the hope that his name will soon be added to the long list of successful Islanders abroad.

LADY MACDONALD'S LIFE OF SIR JOHN.

No man has lived in Canada whose career was so completely in the public eye as that of Sir John Macdonald. Yet there are some points in it upon which his wife has thrown some additional light in the short and well-written article which has just been published. Referring to her husband's early struggles Baroness Macdonald says:

"Practically bread-winning for the family fell to the hard-worked lad. He studied law, sat in an office, and ran home early to help in the little home. There were breaks sometimes of course in the daily routine, when young neighbors met together and amused themselves; but for the most part it was a stern life, full of care and business, both further weighted with scanty means and sad want of opportunities. The boy's promise was only slowly realized. Sent to help in a country law firm when about twenty years old, he did well and made new friends, life gradually brightened and enlarged as experience and income increased. He grew prominent and popular as years went on, and after being called to the bar, opened a law office in Kingston, started on his own account, rose steadily in his profession, made money, and interested himself in politics. Sir John's first visit to England was in 1842, a year after his father's death; and soon after his return to Canada he was elected to sit for Kingston in the Legislative Assembly of the two provinces, of which at that time the now far stretching Dominion of Canada was alone composed."

Of the difficulties by which he was beset and the triumphs which he won later in life, she says:

"For nearly fifty consecutive years he sat in that Parliament, entering the small legislative chamber in Montreal a hearty young man of twenty-six, full of hope, courage and intention, creeping from the more splendid House of Commons at

Ottawa in his seventy-sixth year, suffering and broken, on the warm May evening in 1891 when he came home to die. In the third paragraph of his first electoral address Sir John led his colors to the mast. "I therefore need scarcely state my firm belief that the prosperity of Canada depends upon its permanent connection with the Mother Country, and that I shall resist to the utmost any attempt (from whatever quarter it may come) which may tend to weaken that union."

Through all the fever, the struggles, the battles, hopes and fears, disappointments and successes, joys and sorrows, anxieties and rewards of those long, busy years, this fixed idea of a united empire was his guiding star and inspiration. I, who can speak with something like authority on this point, declare that I do not think any man's mind could be more fully possessed of an overwhelming strong principle than was this man's mind of this principle. It was the "Empire," and "England's precedent," always, in things great and small—from the pattern of a ceremony, or the spelling of a word, to the sharpening of laws and the modelling of a constitution. With a courage at once fierce and gentle, generally in the face of tremendous opposition, often against dangerous odds, he carried measure after measure in the Canadian Parliament, each measure a stone in the edifice of the empire which he so passionately believed in and was so proud to help build and rear. As his first political utterance was the cornerstone of the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway might be considered the top stone of a lifetime's steady work. For ten years he fought that railway battle with the skill, perseverance, and ability of which no history can tell, of course, in every way and at all times aided, strengthened and encouraged by the colleagues and friends he cherished, and the supporters in whose intelligence and fidelity Sir John had so firm a trust. No one disliked more than he did the withholding of credit where credit was due, and against nothing did he strive more earnestly than that selfish assumption of one-man power which he might not unreasonably have been supposed to claim.

Concerning his personal character she says:

"He thoroughly believed in patience and perseverance," which we are told "conquer all things," and had his temper absolutely under control. When he showed anger I believe it was used as a weapon and very seldom because he could not help it. At times when I knew he was most anxious and worried, he would sit in parliament listening to the greatest provocation with an air of placid content; and as years went on, from my constant seat in the speaker's gallery at Ottawa I noticed how still more averse he became to any display of irritation or impatience. In all the political situations preceding Confederation, "John A," as he was called then by friends and foes alike, continued to be the central figure. One can recall him, always apparently unconscious, though noticed everywhere, careless, debonaire, full of life and fun, a tall, slight, rather restless figure, which seemed to attract others as it moved about. He effected no importance at any time, not even in his most successful hours, and yet, in a strange way, managed to keep aloof, to avoid over-interruption, and to find time for constant reading, besides the never-ending strain of work. After Confederation, in 1867, when he returned from England and took a fuller responsibility in a more enlarged sphere, no one can testify better than I to the enormous pressure of business he was capable of, and managed so effectively and brilliantly to do. A host of new subjects occupied his attention, each to him of absorbing interest. It is no exaggeration to say that the nation he was building up now looked to him and him alone for the perfecting of the scheme he had pioneered and carried through amid countless difficulties. What Sir John called in the later years "plain sailing" seemed to me, at the time, very difficult navigation in very troubled waters. Every detail was on its trial, and every move had to be watched and tested with greatest care; each province fought its own battle, and it was above all Sir John's task to draw and weld them together. I, who watched them during the process, knew well what work, early and late, what long nights and anxious days it cost him, while all the time his cheerfulness and courage were unabated, even when unexpected difficulties stared him in the face."

Certainly there is much in the life of Sir John Macdonald that is worthy the consideration of the ambitious youth of the present day.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—Mr. Willard said in the course of his recent speech at Toronto that "there is no man whom women honor so deeply and sincerely as the man of chaste life, the man who breathes the bulleting of temptation "like some strong swimmer in his agony," and makes the port of perfect self-control."

—The St. John Sun notes the Guardian's remarks on the "moral elements" in the Liberal party here, and remarks that "this is not only an intimation that the Warburton party are opposed by the moral and prudent element in the community, but a hint that the Farquharson party will not submit to the domination of the other. The situation grows interesting."

—Montreal Gazette: When the frost is on the pumpkin, and the corn is in the shock, and the coolness of the fall is lit with the brightness of the summer sun, mellowed through an autumn haze, when the grass is yet green and the hills and woods are blazing in scarlet and gold, when every breath of the air is as a new breath of life, and the incentive to walk in the country is irresistible—then if ever are perfect days, and October's glory crowns the year.

—The Montreal Gazette remarks that it is a poor election in the United States that Great Britain does not get drubbed in. She is catching it hot in the New York mayoralty contest. One set of patriots is seeking votes for the Platt machine by referring to Croker, the leader of the Tammany hosts, as the friend of the Prince of Wales. Another is working up sympathy for Van Wyck, the Tammany nominee, by representing that his success will be a great step towards sending British tyranny to hell. It is a somewhat difficult task that is put on the voter of the metropolis of American trade, that of finding out where his duty to his city lies when the guide posts are so divergent.

UNCLE SAM'S PROFITS.

The placing of corn on the free list has been advantageous to the United States producer.

He gets the Canadian market, and the Ontario farmer is as a consequence hit in the price for his oats, which is three cents per bushel less than at this time last year. Canadian artisans are ruled out of the United States, but United States artisans have the freedom of the Dominion.

Canadians cannot hold United States Government contracts; but the contracts for printing bank notes and for building locomotives have been given to United States firms, our own people not being permitted to contract on even terms.

On top of all this we have the log question. The Ontario Government has so handled this matter that Michigan booms while Ontario suffers.

It is to be feared that there is bad management, and a good deal of it somewhere. —Mail and Empire.

MATRIMONIAL.

At half past six o'clock this morning in St. Peter's Cathedral, was solemnized the marriage of Charles C. Gardner, Esquire, and Miss Minnie J. Palmer, daughter of the late Chief Justice Palmer. A large number of interested friends and well-wishers gathered to witness the ceremony which was performed by Rev. James Simpson, M. A., Priest Incumbent, assisted by Rev. Hibbert H. Roche, of the diocese of New Jersey, cousin of the bride, who read the opening address in the marriage service and the exhortation with which it concludes. The chancel steps and the entrance to the sanctuary were decorated with palms and other potted plants; and the altar was bright with flowers and lights. The service was fully choral and heartily sung. The bride who was in her travelling dress, was attended by Master Kenneth Richards as page, and was given away by her brother, H. James Palmer, Esq., S. M. The guests included the immediate relatives and friends of the bride and the members of the Women's Guild of St. Peter's of which she is a member. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner set out on their journey as man and wife attended by the good wishes of the community, in which THE EXAMINER sincerely joins. They will visit Boston and New York and spend the coming winter in Jamaica.

While in the vestry after the ceremony a telegram of congratulation was received by the bride and groom from her sisters Mrs. Canning and Miss Palmer in London, England.

A MICROBE'S WORK.

A microbe is about the smallest thing one meets in a day's journey, but it can do more harm for its size than anything known. Boils, pimples, etc., are simply microbes in the skin which cause irritating blood disorders, if not stopped at once; and it is they that prevent wounds healing also. "Quickcure" kills the microbe immediately after application, and any sore heals rapidly where "Quickcure" is used.

Montreal Gazette: It is learned from the Liberal press that the appointment of Dr. Fiset to the Senate is a part of the movement to reform that body. Dr. Fiset is a Liberal who replaces a Conservative. The Senate will be reformed, evidently, in some people's minds, when there are no Tories left in it.
