Officer Cadet College, Planned For Quebec

OTTAWA, June 14 — (CP) — Canada's third college to train officers for the armed forces is being established at St. Johns, Que., mainly to take care of French-speaking candidates for commissions.

Defence Minister Claxton announced the step today as one of three changes to help meet the "urgent need for officers."

The others:

1. The two services colleges—Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont., and Royal Roads on Vancouver Island—will launch two-year courses to qualify officers in non-technical branches.

2. Candidates for commissions either at the services colleges or through the university officer-training courses can get assistance from the government by agreeing to serve in the regular forces for three years after becoming officers. The government in effect, will put them through college by making them cadets and paying them.

The new college at St. Johns, an old military base 24 miles from Montreal, will be on the same footing as M.C. and Royal Roads. The men will wear the same uniforms and have the same rigorous conditions of service. The main difference is that they will be there only for one year at the start.

Closely linked with Quebec City's Laval University and with Montreal University which will mother its early days, the college will give a one-year course for students with junior matriculation or its equivalent at the outset.

The Minister said: "The new college is primarily designed to meet the special circumstances of French-speaking candidates but will open to students from all over Canada. If the numbers available justify it, the course will be extended to second and third year, cadets completing the course will go on to the universities of R.M.C. as appropriate."

First target engaged was a long spit of mainland enclosing a sort of bay. A radio aerial was spotted among the trees on a hilltop.

While 703's guns slammed right into the thicket, 307 probed forward, going deep into the bay unmolested. She was followed in by 703, now lashing the spit and its already-battered buildings from behind.

Control was excellent. The one gunnery officer on the bridge at one point had his guns working over three different targets.

Friends Reported

But the only junk encountered proved to be friendly, and just as the spit's bombardment was to end word reached 703 that it was in friendly hands.

Between them 307 and 703 plastered likely enemy positions on the coast of the little bay, popping off most of their ammunition with impunity.

Athabaskan's report of their activities read:

"Consider P.C. 703 and 307 did an excellent job and their efforts should have caused the enemy some excitement, though not necessarily despondency."

The day before 307 alone did a similar patrol, probing up the Taedong River estuary. At one point she was nine miles away from the Athabaskan and well up stream.

As the little craft negotiated the river's shallows, commissioner officer David Hurl of Winnipeg liaison officer aboard, was amazed at the captain's skill. He's doing a wonderful job of navigating," he said at one point, "with nothing but a magnetic compass and these out-of-date charts."

Canucks Praise Korean Navy's Expert Gunnery

By BILL BOSS

Canadian Press Staff Writer AT SEA, ABOARD H. M. C. S. ATHABASKAN, By Mail—(CP)—The Koreans' gunnery was excellent.

No fumbling for the target—every shell and bullet went right into the area.

Operating from the Athabaskan as firm base, Korean patrol craft numbers 703 and 307 had gone right inshore to have a close look-see and shoot it up.

Athabaskan was seven miles westward, slowly prowling the Yellow Sea, ready to bombard anything bothering the Koreans. There were Corsair aircraft overhead, too, from the U.S. carrier Bataan.

Search For Junks

Athabaskan's skipper, Commander Dudley King of Victoria, had ordered the Koreans to see whether the Communists were assembling junks for an invasion of United Nations-held islands off the coast. If any were spotted they were to be captured and their crews taken prisoner.

P.C. 703 was captained by Lt.-Cdr. Sohn Byung-Yil, 27-year-old veteran of six years' service with the R.O.K. Navy. He has four ships under his command, all assigned to work under Athabaskan's orders.

For this mission 703 had Sub-Lieut. Jack Watson of Victoria aboard as liaison officer. Watson's radio communications with "Atha Bee" were maintained by PO Earsa Watham of Winnipeg and J.S. Don Lory of New Westminster, B.C. L.S. George Brown of Victoria was along as photographer.

First target engaged was a long spit of mainland enclosing a sort of bay. A radio aerial was spotted among the trees on a hilltop.

U.S. Steel Report

CLEVELAND, June 15 — (AP) — New and expanded plants in the steel industry should be able to turn out enough steel this year to make up for production losses due to strikes, the magazine Steel says today.

Three work stoppages in the industry this year have not had as much effect on the steel supply as you might think from listening to the tumult from Washington, Steel declares.

The output through June 14, it continues, "was only 3,000,000 tons less than in the corresponding period of 1951, a year in which steel output set an all-time record."

"The loss could be made up through additional capacity that will come into operation."

Steel raises another point: that the pressure for steel is "distinctly less" than in 1951.

"Market analysts of one of the big steel companies expect total steel demand in 1952 'to be between 105,000,000 and 110,000,000 tons. The 105,000,000 figure would be no more than was turned out last year," Steel says.

Another favorable factor is that producers of 14 per cent of U.S. capacity still are operating.

"Late" But "Not Too Late"

Oh, 'tis late, late, much later than we think! Nations refusing to cooperate. A universe tottering on the brink of disaster, un mindful of its fate.

'Tis late, late, oh, that peoples might awake! And avert the terrible holocaust.

That will destroy all mankind, so let's awake!

Our thirst for power, greed, ere worlds are lost.

Oh, 'tis late, late, but it's still not too late!

Alas we oft despair as nations grope, If with brotherly love we permeate Our negotiations, we still may hope.

Written Monday, March 24, 1952. I groped my way through the maze of my ideas much as nations grope to straighten out their differences. May they emerge as the mists of dissension clear away, and come out into the clear light of day,—hope their beacon light—G. S. Gordon.

Indecision Seen On N. Y. Stock Market Last Week

NEW YORK, June 15 — (AP) — The stock market held well to its high level prices last week, but there was a broad element of indecision present all the time.

The market was quiet all week. A high for the year of $105.80 in the AP average of 60 stocks was reached on Monday. That was the fourth straight session for a 1952 high, and the average stood at the highest level since June 13, 1930.

Railroads showed strength. A slide in the market was seen Tuesday with steels and rails blazing the way.

Wednesday, half of Tuesday's loss was regained and Thursday lost half of the Wednesday gain.

On Friday the market gained back half of the Thursday loss. The net result was a standoff in the average.

The five most active stocks on the stock exchange this week were American Telephone up ½ at 151-¾, Pennsylvania Railroad up 1 at 20½, New York Central up ½ at 21¼, Benquet Mining off ½ at 21-¼, and Delaware, Lackawanna & Western up 1½ at 15.
