

TRUE WEALTH; OR, BETTER THAN GOLD.

It was hard to believe, it seemed impossible, Ada Blake said to herself, and yet her father had told her the very words her betrothed had said to his companion as they stood together on the station platform.

"I would never marry Ada Blake for her beauty alone. I have reason to believe she has wealth besides."

To Ada one course was clear. She would see him when he came there that night and break off the engagement. Yet her heart grew faint within her as his step was heard in the hall.

She slipped away from the loving embrace to which he would have folded her.

Disappointed in this, Arthur strove to imprison one of the little hands, as he took a seat by her side, but withdrawing it, Ada said:

"Not now, Arthur—Mr. Hayden. Wait. I have something to say to you first."

There was a puzzled look in the young man's eyes as he listened to the plain, but gently-spoken words that followed.

"What makes you think that I sought for money with a wife, Ada?"

Here Ada repeated the words that her father had heard him use the evening before; and as Arthur, taking a notebook from his pocket, jotted down something, she exclaimed:

"And you said this?"

"That I intended to marry a rich wife; I did; and I meant every word of it. In fact," here he stopped to make another addition to the notes he was taking, "I believe you to be rich—very rich."

"I am at a loss to understand how you obtained your information."

"I had it from you. You don't suppose I would obtain information so important as this second-hand, do you?"

"I don't suppose anything about it. I never told you so, Mr. Hayden. If you inferred so from anything I have said, you greatly mistook me."

Arthur jotted down something further upon his note-book.

"My dear Ada, you have told me so all of a dozen times since I came into this room. You are telling me so all the time."

"There is more than one way of giving and gaining information," he headed smiling, as he met Ada's startled and bewildered gaze.

"This may be very amusing to you, Mr. Hayden," she responded gravely, "but it is a serious matter to me. Am I to understand that it was the wealth you thought I possessed that induced you to seek my hand?"

"It was the wealth that I knew you possessed. Why, Ada, darling, you are richer than any woman I know. I have jotted down a few of the precious jewels which constitute your dowry. Let me read them to you."

"Thankfulness and filial reverence and affection, $200,000 each. Honesty and sense, ditto. Neatness and industry, $200,000 each. Refinement and intelligence, do. One million at the lowest estimate. You see I did not dare to rate them too high lest I make the prize I am so anxious to win unattainable."

"Arthur—"

"Wait a moment, dear; there is something that I have forgotten. Turn your head a little more to the right. Wealth of nut-brown hair, fair, blue eyes, dimpled mouth and form the perfection of womanly grace and beauty. Now, if I should put my value on all this, I should say another million, at the least. But lest I incur the suspicion of rating the beautiful casket above the jewels that make it so precious, we will say half a million."

Ada's head had somehow found its way down on the speaker's shoulder, nor did she manifest the slightest objection to the arm that encircled her.

"Dear Arthur!"

The brief silence that followed was full of sacred meaning and happiness to both.

"When I made the remark that your father overheard, I referred to the riches to be found in a wife, not those that come with her. And how richly dowered my wife—that is to be—she has unconsciously been telling me herself in many ways. God make me worthy of her!"

All Right, 5817.

THIS SPLENDID HORSE is too well known to the breeders of Prince Edward Island to need any puffing. They all know what he is, and what a grand family of trotters and roadsters he has built up in the Maritime Provinces, where his stock have taken high rank, and are every year coming to the front. He is one of the very few horses in the provinces that contributed a representative to the 230 list in 1889, his son Charlie Mitchell having made a record, in a contested race, of 2:28 1/2.

GRATEFUL-COMFORTING EPPS'S COCOA BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Coconos, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
