

MISCELLANEOUS.

VIEW OF THE CATHOLIC CLERGY.

From the London Times, Dec. 16.

On Saturday, Dec. 14, a meeting of the Liverpool county magistrates was held to take into consideration the subject of the proposed Fetian procession to occur on the morning of the 15th inst. Canon Fisher attended on behalf of the Roman Catholic clergy, and briefly addressed the Bench, assuring them that himself and his colleagues were very anxious to assist the magistrates in every possible way to preserve the public peace. He also assured them that the Catholic clergy, as a body, had no sympathy with the murderers of Sergeant Brett, and that they regarded the murder, apart from all political considerations, as a most serious crime. He also handed to the bench, to be read by them as they might see fit, the following proclamation:

"To the Irish portion of our beloved flock in the diocese of Liverpool. Dear children in Jesus Christ, we addressed our flock in the borough of Liverpool a few days ago, and we gave them solemn warning, and an authoritative command that they should abstain from joining or taking any part in the proposed procession to-morrow. As we have at heart your temporal and eternal interests, we repeat the injunction we have already given, and we command you by the authority which we hold from God, and in virtue of our sacred office, that neither in the borough of Liverpool, nor in its neighborhood, nor in any part of the county subject to our jurisdiction, do you hold any meeting or join in any procession. You have been always wont to obey our words and to obey our commands. Do not send sorrow to the great God of Peace, and to commemorate the wonders of His love to us all. Pray God bless you and keep you in His peace."

"ALEX. COCHRAN."

Yesterday morning the following letter from the Right Rev. Dr. Cornthwaite, Roman Catholic Bishop of Beverley, was read at morning mass in all the Roman Catholic chapels in Leeds:

"SPRINGFIELD HOUSE, LITTLE WOODHOUSE, LEEDS, Dec. 14, 1867.

"DEAR CHILDREN IN JESUS CHRIST—You are invited, we hear with anxiety and sadness, to join in a procession which we, as your bishop, feel bound in the sight of God to condemn, and which the authorities of the town have deemed it necessary to prohibit, and if need be, to prevent."

"Has the time come at length when you will refuse to listen to the counsels and warnings of your chief pastor? Has the voice of the Lord been in the night, and to consider, and influence? Are Catholics seriously proposing to celebrate the approach of Christmas, the festival of the Prince of Peace, in an act which all in authority—spiritual and temporal—condemn and forbid as likely to lead to contention and strife?"

"We cannot, my dear children, so judge you, dear children in Jesus Christ, so feel you, that you will listen to our words, and that you will obey our commands."

"You will absent yourselves from the proposed procession, and you will take no part or share in it. You will not be quick and quiet to your homes after this good keeping, and neither by participation nor as spectators give encouragement to an act which may occasion much harm, and can produce no possible good."

"As you shall obey our commands, we bless you, and commend you to God, that He may have you always in His good keeping."

"ROBERT, Bishop of Beverley."

Telegrams sent from different parts of the kingdom yesterday, announce that no attempt was made to form the intended processions.

DEADLY MURDER AT MONTREAL.—At half-past eight on Thursday evening, George Wilson, a relative of the sergeant of the 10th Royal Canadian Regiment, shot and killed Lance Corporal of the same regiment, named James Campbell, killing him instantly. The murder took place in one of the rooms of the Victoria Barracks, and appears to have been committed while the parties were under the influence of liquor. Campbell was lying on the bed, and Wilson passing entirely through the body and burying itself in the wall. Wilson was quite cool and collected when arrested, and voluntarily held out his hands for the handcuffs.

THE EMPRESS CARLOTTA.—The news from Brussels, says the France, is that the condition of the Empress Carlotta continues to improve. She goes out every day, when the weather permits, for a long drive or walk. She visits her Majesty regularly, and she is seen in the streets, and the rest of her time is divided between music and painting, for which latter art she has a great aptitude. The Queen, her sister-in-law, does not allow a day to pass without going to see her, and she receives her visits from the King and the Count and Countess de Flandre."

THE EUROPEAN GRAIN TRADE.—The enormous exportation of grain from Hungary continues without diminution. A letter from Pesth, dated 23rd inst., says that the steam and great ships of the Danube take advantage of the last days which remain to take their cargoes up the river, and the railways are even more busy. The grain all goes to Bodenbach, which is the great centre from which it is sent to France, Hamburg, and England. The demand seems to increase rather than diminish.

FEARFUL INUNDATIONS IN MANILLA.—The overland China mail gives the following news from Manilla:—The British ship Stuart Wortley was totally lost off Manilla, on Sept. 20. All hands saved. Fearful inundations have occurred at Manilla. Over 10,000 Indians have been drowned. The Spanish mail steamer Malensia, from Hong Kong to Manilla, has been missing for 21 days. It is feared she is totally lost. Two earthquakes took place at Manilla, on October 4th. No loss of life or damage to buildings."

BRUTAL MURDER.—On Saturday night last an affray occurred in a tavern at Kennebec, between two men named Miller and Lee, which resulted in the death of the latter. They were playing cards, and quarrelled over the game, when Miller got up, went to another room, and returning with a gun, aimed it deliberately at Lee, and shot him dead. We believe Miller has been arrested.—Halifax Reporter, Jan. 9.

An English army officer writes from Abyssinia to his friends at home, that the remaining difficulties of the expedition are not great. The thermometer gets up to 100 deg. regularly; sleepers in the tents, roused by hissing noises, find snakes under their beds; and when the men get on their beds they find scorpions in occupation."

WINTER'S BALM OF WILD CHERRY.—This medicine is "a combination and a form indeed," for healing and curing all the ills which afflict us in the shape of coughs, colds and inflammation of the throat, lungs and chest.

New York now has a city telegraph with forty stations. There are 1500 hand telegraph stations in all, and when in full operation a message can be sent in any part of the city in five minutes and for twenty cents.

The Mexican Gen. Marquez recently employed a battery to make a secret chamber in case of his house, and he has not as yet been seen. They say that Marquez killed him to save the secret."

By taking Parrot's Fatigue Pills, the body is invigorated and the system regulated; the liver and bowels are kept healthy and strengthened to discharge their functions, and the bowels regulated.

Boston Ayres has projected a railroad across the Andes to Valparaiso, and requests Chile to co-operate in constructing it. The route is said to be practicable.

FACTS WORTH KNOWING.—Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is superior to any other Liniment or Pain Killer in the world. It is equally efficacious whether used internally or applied externally. It will cure coughs, colds, influenza, whooping cough or croup, and is excellent for all lung complaints.

A fashionable lady writes to a friend that she had been to hear Dickens read David Copperfield and Bob Sawyer. She must have been a descendant of the worthy woman who was Mrs. Kibble in "Katherine of Aragon."

FAMINE IN SWEDEN.

The news from Sweden is appalling. Three hundred thousand of her people are on the verge of starvation. An eloquent letter, addressed to Mr. Seward by W. W. Thomas, jr., of Portland, has been published in some of our American exchanges. We make the following extract from the Philadelphia Press:—"Three hundred thousand hard-worked, patient Swedes are starving in Norway. Their crops for three years have been bad; last year they were very bad; and now, even their miserable bread, made of straw and dark trees, has given out. They sit in their cheerless huts, and die. My private advices from Scandinavia published in this calamity as worse even than the published account."

A Jerseyman shot himself the other day, and the coroner returned a verdict of suicide, adding that he "returned voluntarily, and of his own free will, and without any compulsion."

ALFONSO, THE ROCKS.—The great cost of silver and gold arises not so much from their scarcity in the earth, as the difficulty of extracting them from their stony combinations. Dr. J. C. Ayer, the well known chemist of Massachusetts, has cut this Gordian knot. After having merited and received the gratitude of half mankind, by his remedies that cure their disease, he is now winning the other half, by opening to them an easy road to the exhaustless treasures of the hills. He has discovered and published a chemical process, which renders, at little cost, the hardest rocks and ores friable like chalk, so that the precious metals are loosened from their confinement, and easily gathered. Mines too poor to pay, may be worked at profit now, and the yield of rich mines is largely increased, while the cost of extracting the metals from the ore, is diminished. Either is a great achievement, to enrich mankind, or cure their diseases. But we are informed our celebrated countryman adheres to the latter, as his speciality and chief ambition.—Buffalo Sentinel.

UNITED STATES.

HORRIBLE AFFAIR.—Murder of a Girl to obtain a Life Insurance.—A horrible affair took place in the village of Canaan, Hudson County, New York, two weeks ago. A tenement house in the village was partly destroyed by fire, a girl of twelve years of age burned to death. From some suspicious circumstances, the father, a Mr. Brown, who had been lately arrived and was staying temporarily in the place, was arrested on a charge of arson and murder, in setting fire to the house and causing the death of the child, but they were discharged by the coroner's jury. It transpired, however, that the parents had a life policy of $5,000 on the deceased, in the Traveler's Accident Company of Hartford. It was a three months' policy, taken out from the time the family took their residence in Canaan, and had only twelve days to run when the insured girl died. The parents applied to the company for the amount of the policy, but the circumstances aroused the suspicions of the officers that it was not right. They caused the body to be disinterred, and an examination was instituted, when marks of violence were plainly traced on the back of the child's head. An officer of the company immediately proceeded to Canaan, and made a thorough examination of the premises where the disaster occurred, and the developments served to strengthen the suspicion that foul play had been used, and that Mr. and Mrs. Brown had been guilty of the terrible crime. The officer telegraphed to Connecticut, where the suspected parties were rearrested, and brought back to Hudson. Further investigation left no doubt of the guilt of the parties. When the body of the child was found in the closet, after the fire, the closet door was closed, locked, and it was discovered that the child had been wrapped up in company with the body, and that she had surely been burned to death; if she was not dead already from the effects of laudanum. The woman has made a full statement of her connection with the affair. She was not at the house where the child was killed, but at hotel, when the fire occurred, and says that before the fire she had been to the hotel, and he would meet her there. The hotel was about two miles distant. He then did the business, the firing of the building and what followed. She admits that the child was not Brown's, but was obtained in Dayton, Ohio.

Under the head of "A Gloomy Picture of New England," the Boston Commercial Bulletin has an article, full of sorrows and complaints, pitiful to read, and more pitiful to contemplate. It says:—"In no part of the country is industry at so low an ebb, capital so unremunerative in its investments, and their joint products so poorly paid for as here in New England at the present time. The agricultural products of the West and South, and the raw material products of the Middle States. Not only are our manufactures closed, or running on short time, and our ships are idle, but the laboring classes are out of employment, but our commercial classes are suffering immense losses from the stagnation of trade and shrinkage in merchandise values. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon their shoulders the depression in prices principally falls. And the situation with us is rendered still more severe and trying, from the fact that our foreign commerce and its dependent interests continue in a depressed condition. In fact, the noble Republic, and the Empire, are in a state of prostration, and the pride and boast of our New England, the ships ploughed the waters of every sea, and poured into our markets the wealth of every clime, are now, alas! falling into comparative decay. The policy of the United States is not to be the products of New England commerce and industry, but also, to a great extent, those of every other section of the country. Hence, upon