RACING DRIVER

By ALEXANDER CAMPBELL

Author of Daughter of Exile, etc.

And whose idea of perfection was this Greek goddess stuff?

That was easy to see, too. Who else but this rather cold blooded skull-hunting finance, Mr. Rupert Featherstone?

It all fitted.

Two to three years ago Miss Ellington would have been in that phase of development when any idea looks attractive, so long as it can be made to look rather unique.

"The fellow," muttered Frank, "must be one of the most unutterable prigs that ever walked."

DOROTHY IS DISTURBED

It would not have surprised him to know that he was echoing an opinion of Mr. Rupert Featherstone which had been uttered many a time and oft, in the village school where Master Featherstone had gained bursary after bursary, in the University which had had to bestow numerous degrees upon him, and finally in the greater world, including this very district, which had opened up to him thereafter.

While Frank lay and thought this out in the deepening darkness, Miss Ellington stared out of the window of the big study at the blurred outlines of the trees beyond the lawn.

A cheerful fire crackled round logs in the hearth. Her father sat close to the blaze, bowed over a book, a black pipe gripped firmly between his strong teeth. The flames gave his high bald head a jovial pink appearance.

Dorothy was thinking.

Why on earth did I talk so much? I don't see what possible interest it could all be to him. Though he did ask all the questions. And he didn't look the inquisitive type.

I'm afraid I rather offended him when he asked why I was going to Africa. Heavens! I hope he didn't think I was officially warning him off. Anyway, he wouldn't need any warning. Not my type, and I'm sure I'm not his.

But why did I do it? I should have laughed lightly and said quite casually, "Oh, I'm going out to be married." That's what Rupert would have done.

Thank goodness, her mind ran on, anyway we won't have any bother about jealousy. I'm sure Rupert would never be jealous of anybody. Some men would be furious if they knew I'd met a good-looking man who was going to be my travelling companion. If we have to introduce him, Rupert will just say "How d'ye do. I think the Mezozoic period's much the most interesting, don't you?" And when he finds our travelling companion-to-be doesn't know a thing about the Hezozoic period—as I'm sure he doesn't—he'll simply forget he's there.

Professor Ellington sucked his pipe, which emitted a horribly bubbly sound, like something having its throat cut. He took it out of his mouth, and regarded it with distaste. He had a habit of absentmindedly smoking a pipe for days without troubling to clean it. When its increasing foulness finally penetrated even the dim and far-off region where his brain happened at the time to be roaming, he simply threw the thing away and bought another one. In this way Tomkins had collected a large number of quite valuable pipes, the best of which he kept, and the others gave away to grateful relatives and friends in the village.

Professor Ellington laid the pipe into an ash-try, from which Tomkins would remove it in the morning. Being thus restored to the world of action, he turned to where his daughter was gazing out of the window.

"Nice fellow," he remarked.

"Did you speak, Father?"

"Yes. Said he was a nice fellow."

For some reason quite obscure to herself Dorothy found herself faintly blushing.

"Who?"

"Young racing chap. Carter."

"Oh. Yes. He seems all right."

"Good looking chap."

"Good looking?" She frowned as one who tries to recall something carelessly observed. "Do you think so. I didn't notice."

The professor shot her a glance which might be described by the uncharitable as first startled and then cunning.

"O course," he said slowly, "I was thinking more about his skull. Rather a rare type, you know. Don't know whether Rupert showed you that treatise by MacFarden on variations of the usual brachycephalic——"

"Oh!" said Dorothy. "Skulls!" Her voice grew ragged. "Can't we ever hear anything except about skulls? I think I'll go to bed."

She approached him, kissed him, rubbed his scalp where the last remnant of hair grew with affection, and left him.

Professor Ellington gazed into the fire. His daughter had just insulted his life's work, but he looked pleased rather than hurt.

The reason was rather astonishing.

For the first time in two years his daughter had been on the verge—well, not exactly of losing her temper, that would be going too far. But on the verge of being irritated.

Was it too much to hope, Professor Ellington wondered wistfully, that the next step might be real irritation; and the next an honest and satisfying rage?

THE PROFESSOR PONDERS TOO

When Rupert Featherstone had first appeared on the professor's horizon the older man had been attracted to him. He appeared modest; he knew his subject inside out; and he was incredibly efficient, a quality which the professor rather admired, being an incredibly slipshod man himself. Rupert, he had quickly discovered, had many valuable traits which qualified him for the role of assistant. He never lost his temper (which the professor often did), he could write letters and memoranda without trailing off into grumblings and speculations (unlike the professor) and he had a card-index mind (which the professor lacked).

There might not be much inspiration in his work, but there was neatness, order, method.

Now, to his daughter the professor had transmitted a good many of his own characteristics. This was not surprising, since her mother had died when she was quite young, and the child had been left to him to bring up.

And, he was sadly admitting about the time when Rupert appeared on the scene, he had carried out his parental duties in an extremely hazy, sketchy, though good natured and well intentioned way.

Dorothy was growing up — or rather, he noted with some surprised apprehension at the time—had already grown up (it must have happened during that fiery and protracted controversy with the American heretic, Malone, over the alleged Indowa Indaba finds) altogether undisciplined and uneducated

KISS YOUR TIRED FEELING GOODBYE!

Pepless Many Suffer Low Blood Count—And Don't Know It.

The baffling thing about low blood count is that you can weigh about as much as you ever did — even look healthy and strong, yet — you can feel as if you had lead in your legs, dopey, tired and pepless.

Low blood count means you haven't got enough red blood corpuscles. It is their vital job to carry life-giving oxygen from your lungs throughout your body. And just as it takes oxygen to explode gasoline in your car and make the power to turn the wheels, so you must have plenty of oxygen to explode the energy in your body and give you going power.

Get Dr. Williams Pink Pills today. They are world-famous for the help they give in increasing the number and strength of red corpuscles. Then with your blood count up, you'll feel like bounding up the stairs as if you were floating on air. Ask your druggist for Dr. Williams Pink Pills today.

Bob Baker Stars In Film Of Old West

Presenting one of the most thrilling and colorful dramas of the old west ever brought to the screen, Bob Baker's new Universal musical western, "Black Bandit," started yesterday at the Capitol Theatre, with Marjorie Reynolds and Hal Taliaferro in featured roles.

The picture reveals the powerful dramatic story of two twin brothers, one a Sheriff and the other a cattle rustler and badman, and shows what happens when they grow to manhood and face each other with blazing guns during a spectacular stampede of wild horses on the range.

In addition to the hard riding and fast action of the picture, Baker introduces several new western melodies and sings them in the rich baritone voice which made him a favorite over the national radio networks before his entry into films.

Romantic flavor is given the story through the presence of Marjorie Reynolds, famous "Queen of the westerns," whose spectacular riding and daring stunts have long been a source of amazement to theatre-goers.

Impressive scenes include Baker's escape from jail when he goes off to capture his bandit brother, the stampede of a great herd of wild horses, and a blood-tingling race down a mountain side climaxed by a jump off a high cliff into a river below.

"Black Bandit" features such popular western players as Jack Rockwell, Forrest Taylor, Glenn Strange and Carleton Youngs.

"Dr. Kildare" Returns To Prince Edward Today

Young "Dr. Kildare" goes through another whirlwind adventure, this time solving a murder case in "Calling Dr. Kildare", second of the medical-detective series, now playing at the Prince Edward Theatre, with Lew Ayres and Lionel Barrymore.

In the second picture based on Max Brand's stories, Ayres becomes infatuated with Lana Turner, hides a wounded fugitive from the law for her sake, clears him by finding the real murderer, only to discover that by doing so he has lost the girl. The wise old Dr. Gillespie, played by Barrymore, solves his problems in a unique, dramatic twist. Harold S. Bucquet directed with deft skill.

Players include Laraine Day as a nurse, a new heart-throb for Kildare, Alma Kruger as the hard-boiled superintendent of nurses in the big hospital in which most of the action is laid, Nat Pendleton and Marie Blake as the comedy team, Bobs Watson as the crippled boy Barrymore heals, Samuel S. Hinds, Lynne Carver, Emma Dunn, Walter Kingsford, Reed Hadley and Nelt Craig.

Dramatic highlights include a transfusion operation in a fugitive's hideout, the dramatic capture of a murderer and its tragic aftermath ,a gripping scene between Barrymore and Bobs Watson, playing the crippled boy, and many intimate details of hospital life and the work of police detectives.

TO INTERNE AT P.E.I. HOSPITAL—Mr. Owen Curtis has arrived in the city from Kentville Sanitorium to begin his duties as interne in the P.E.I. Hospital on Saturday, August 12th.

VISITED AMONG FRIENDS— Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Myers of Vancouver, B. C., left yesterday for Toronto where they will spend a month visiting Mr. Myers' brother Mr. C. A. Myers. Later on they plan to visit Dr. A. J. W. Myers of Hartford, returning home by way of the Okanogan. They are accompanied by their sister Margaret. After an absence of several years they see many changes and are pleased with the improved appearance of the province. They note with pleasure the paved roads and were much interested in the National Park and think "Dalvay by the Sea" something to talk about, as well as the platinum foxes seen at Wellington McNeill's ranch. They visited many places of beauty and interest, Vernon, Montague, Cardigan, Fortune Annandale, Georgetown, Souris, St. Peters, Tracadie, Cavendish, Malpeque, O'Leary, Howlan, and visited friends in many other places, Marshfield, Pownal, Tryon, Lake Verde, Mount Albion, Hazelbrook, etc. They had a very enjoyable vacation, and plan if possible to return next summer. Their many friends will welcome them.

MONTAGUE

Work on the new Town Building in Montague has been progressing rapidly in the past few weeks and the building is nearing completion. The air-conditioning system is being installed at present and the structure when finished will be up-to-date in every way.—F

Fire of an incendiary origin was discovered by William Rice of Montague in time to prevent the loss of his buildings. Seeing smoke issuing from the corner of the barn Mrs. Rice ran out and extinguished the blaze before any real damage was done. Upon investigation as to the cause of the blaze Mr. Rice found an oil can filled with small sticks which had been placed against the building and ignited. The R. C. M. P. are investigating the case and hope to apprehend the fire-bug.—F.

The old Ives building on the corner of the Wood Island hill in Montague has recently been purchased by L. H. Coffin and part of it has been demolished. The main part is being moved back from the street about fifty feet. Always this has been a dangerous blind corner but now the motorist is given a clear vision both coming down the hill and on main street. The building has passed through many hands since is was built by D. G. Cameron for a general store. It has since been occupied by Crockett and McDonell, Ives and Murdock, Bears and Bears and now Mr. Coffin has transformed it into an up-to-date service station.

Mr. Joseph Harris of Elmira, employee of the C. N. R. has recently been transferred to Montague section coming here from Albany.

Miss Jean Bell of Guernsey Cove is spending a few days with her friend, Mrs. Calvin Hilchey, Montague.

Mr. Gordon McLean of Montague is receiving the congratulations of his friends on being awarded the contract for the interior decoration of the new Town Hall.

Master Kenneth Clements, son of R. K. Clements is at present a patient in King's County Hospital, where he underwent a leg operation. His many friends wish him a speedy recovery.—F.

Miss Frieda Gardiner of Cardigan arrived home Monday to spend a few weeks with her mother. Miss Gardiner is a nurse-in-training at St. Martha's Hospital at Antigonish. She is accompanied by her friend, Miss Evelyn O'Brien of Newfoundland.
