Prime Ministers Are Meeting In Spot Steeped In History

BY ALAN HARVEY LONDON (CP) — Brushing aside the clichés, it can be said that the Commonwealth's third biennial summit is taking place in a building simply reeking with history.
The setting for the conference of Commonwealth prime ministers is called Marlborough House, after the first duke of that name, and cradle of splendor is the conference sessions are being held in what used to be the red drawing room. The first that struck the eye is the long, low oval table of red African wood, so highly polished that it reflects the light in the hall of mirrors.
There is a chienne - weaver carpet weighing three-quarters of a ton and stretching 55 feet. There are glittering blue damask drapes, crystal chandeliers and pink brocade walls with gilt enrichments.
LOUIS XIV RECALLED The sense of Louis XIV magnificence is emphasized electrically by black marble staircase and massive wall paintings recalling victories by British and French troops at the battle of the Marston church and one of England's greatest soldiers, including scenes of the battle of Malplaquet.

New Rotary Members Speak in Paint, Phones

Two recently elected members of the Rotary Club spoke briefly at the luncheon meeting held in the Charlottetown Hotel yesterday, as required under their membership. The talks dealt with their respective classification. Lloyd Grant, manager of the Sherwin Williams Co. spoke on the paint distribution industry, spoke on paint distribution, emphasizing the requirements in type and color to meet the exacting needs of modern construction and durability.
"There are 170 paint manufacturers in Canada and the company I represent has four manufacturing centers, with seven warehouses located at four points throughout the country and 100 company-owned branches of the type operated here," Mr. Grant stated. Rail, water, bus and air transportation is used to bring paint products to the sales areas.
"Over 75 per cent of the claims received against faulty paint are justified," Mr. Grant said to explain why the quality of paint processes is vigorously tested by experts. "The undercoat remaining on a previous job is usually at fault, or as a recent test made here, with new latex paint on a wall in the Columbia cedar shingles disclosed they had not been cured properly and action set in the wood after the paint was applied. The paint was not at fault," Mr. Grant said.
