other method is to place the teat cup assembly on a rack and fill the tubes and teat cup liners with a fresh chlorine solution containing 200 parts per million of active chlorine, or with a 0.4 to 0.5 percent lye solution. Leave them until the next milking. Before using the rubber parts that are kept in or filled with the lye solution, they should preferably be rinsed with a fresh chlorine solution.

To prepare the lye solution, dissolve a 13 ounce can of lye in one gallon water contained in a crock. Keep this stock solution, which has a strength of 8.5 percent lye, in a jug plainly labelled. Keep the solution away. Use 6 ounces of this solution and make up to one gallon with water. This makes a 0.4 to 0.5 percent solution. Lye is corrosive to certain metals, particularly aluminum and tin.

Strainer

Type of strainer: A well-tinned strainer of adequate size should be used. It should be free from cracks and crevices. The most desirable type is the kind which utilizes a single-service cotton filter pad. Cloths are unsatisfactory for straining; they are difficult to clean. Don't use them.

Straining: By means of clean, dry fingers place a filter pad in position in the strainer. After 10 to 20 gallons of milk have been strained, remove the pad and place it in a waste receptacle. Rinse the strainer by means of tap water and insert a new cotton pad, using clean, dry fingers, or pick up the pad with the moist metal strainer disc. Using single-service cotton filtering material, in the top perforated tray of a surface cooler, is also satisfactory. Strainers should never be bounced as this breaks the filter disc. When straining is slow replace the filter.

Purpose of straining: Straining removes only coarse dirt particles and such extraneous material as hair and small bits of straw. Dirty milk, even after straining does not become clean milk. Some fine dirt remains in the milk. Bacteria cannot be removed by straining. Therefore it is imperative to keep the dirt out of the milk. Do the straining in the milk house, not in the barn.
