ELLEN'S DIARY

A Place In The Country 'Tis Dream Of Everyone

"June is the nice month in the country, isn't it?" a city-woman leaving by way of the front verandah commented this afternoon. She stopped a minute on the old sandstone doorstep to look out over the reach of stram and valley below, all attractive now and beautiful as is all Island countryside decked out as it is in spring shades and first blossoms. "And" she added, "a farm is a quiet place, so peaceful. Here the world passes you by. I sometimes think that one day we may..."

"...retire to a little place in the country?" we chuckled. Folks do, you know! Royalty has its country estates. The president of the U. S. has his "little farm" to come to for relaxation and quiet.

"If there were no winter with its snowstorms to isolate one", she smiled.

"Snowstorms aren't too disturbing. They only make it all well, a pleasant change! And nowadays there is actually no isolation. After a snowstorm the roads are cleared. Oh, perhaps not immediately but presently, these byroads. And in an emergency if at all possible they are cleared."

"It's the air of tranquility on farms that attracts me—the unhurried pace of it" she said moving away to her car.

The unhurried pace of it? We smiled at the thought. A peaceful spot we find this farm of ours where these days the youngest of the fifth generation to root here, comes to press his nose against the screen-door to beg some favour off us. Peaceful, but by no means leisurely.

Looking back now we remember how busy today was with the farming. On the heels of the choring and breakfast, came an excursion for James to round up "more of that grass-seed" which seems to disappear rapidly this spring. It must be that extra acreage is in the process of being seeded down.

"Hey, don't you know what 'seeded down' means?" we overheard Mack question a youngster the other day in some surprise. "No! Didn't your Dad ever tell you? Well," he explained, "it means that when you sow the grain for this year's harvest, you sow too the grass seeds for your next year's new meadows. Now, do you understand?"

And the younger lad (bless all children absorbing every-which-way such gems of knowledge!) nodded solemnly, and the two were off then to their play.

"I can't be away too long, Ellen," James said as with Alex too a passenger bent on seeing "cows" and "more cows" we drew away from the yard. "There is that ewe" he observed hearing a bleat from the orchard. "Any time now" he nodded. "And that heifer..."

"Which heifer?"

"That one of our own, Ellen!" he replied surprised that we should need to ask.

"Cows!" Alex exclaimed with a wide grin sighting those in a field by the roadside.

"And" James continued, reining in a moment before entering the highway "we've stone to pick and brush to burn and...we're slow this year with our cropping."

Leisurely? Not the farming at Alderlea today! But the field-work made good progress. And lambkin, and a little heifer, this day brought, which slips now from touch in the dimness.

Until tomorrow — Dairy, Good-night.

Fashion Commentator Has Elaborate Gown For Ball

By EDNA BLAKELY
Canadian Press Staff Writer
TORONTO (CP) — They may not know the difference between aquamarine and tangerine, but 30 male radio and TV announcers have been told the fundamentals of fashions and colors in preparation for the coming Royal Tour.

The men admitted they needed, and in fact enjoyed, a briefing on fashions by Joy Davies, commissioned as fashion advisor for the CBC's coverage of the tour. Miss Davies is a former model and actress who now runs a charm school in Toronto.

The attractive fashion expert will accompany the announcers on the tour across Canada and back. It will be her job to interpret the elegant fashion terms into simple but descriptive phrases which sound "natural when spoken by a man."

If circumstances are the same as on previous occasions, reporters will learn what the Queen is to wear just a few hours before each appearance, at a press conference. Miss Davies will put the formal announcements into easily-understood style and then brief the radio and TV commentators on the royal wardrobe.

On a suggestion from Prince Philip, the Queen's wardrobe for the tour has been so organized that each ensemble has a number. However, the Queen—like any other woman—occasionally switches part of her costume.

If there's a last-minute change, or the formal bulletin fails to turn up, Miss Davies advised the commentators: "If in doubt, don't say anything."

She advised them to watch for such things as the Queen's favorite color, blue; whether her hat is large or small, and whether her shoes have open toes or pointed toes.

"If the announcer says the Queen is wearing a soft blue dress with a grey fur stole, the listener can imagine the scene," Miss Davies says.

"Color is the most important part of the description."

AVERT CRITICISM

Thom Benson, executive producer for the CBC's tour coverage, said Miss Davies had been commissioned because "on past royal tours we have been criticized, among other things, for not properly or fully describing the Queen's clothing."

"We hope that this time we won't have an apricot organdie afternoon dress described as a blue linen suit," he smiled.

Miss Davies is busy planning her own wardrobe for the trip. Layers and layers of tissue paper will be used to pack her gown for the Queen Elizabeth ball in Montreal. When she leaves Toronto in mid-June she will take clothes for the eastern portion of the tour. Other outfits will remain here to be picked up for the trip West. Apart from her fashion advice to the announcers, she must be ready to appear on camera at any time.

Singer David Atkinson Slated To Visit Island

David Atkinson, Canadian baritone, leads a very busy life. To keep track of a popular singer is like trying to "keep up with the Joneses" for it's just that when it comes to keeping pace with list of engagements that DAVID ATKINSON fulfills in a twelve month period.

Since David Atkinson returned from Brussels after a thrilling success at the World's Fair just a year ago he has been singing in nearly every city of importance on the North American continent.

His recent big hit in that hilarious musical frolic "SAY, DARLING" drew the attention of all the critics especially that hard-to-please John MacLane of the Journal - American who aptly described the situation thus: "The most improbable casting of the season was David Atkinson who turned out to be a surprise and a delight," and this proves the point that hard work, and more hard work, is the only way to success.

As the leading baritone associated with the New York City Opera Company our Canadian compatriot Atkinson stands head and shoulders above a galaxy of operatic stars not only vocally and histrionically but physically for the very good reason that he measures six feet four inches in height.

At the moment the New York City Opera Company is enjoying an unprecedented run and the musical comedy "He Who Gets Slapped" seems to have caught the public fancy in no uncertain fashion.

This episode depicting a phase in circus life is an adaptation of Andreyev's play entitled "PANTALON" with Atkinson taking the title role. The circus atmosphere of the plot might be compared to Leoncavallo's famous "I Pagliacci" which is always a companion piece to Mascagni's "Cavallero Rusticano."

Although a very busy man in the theatrical world Atkinson will make a brave attempt during the coming summer to pay a visit to his uncle Captain Maurice Burke at Victoria, Queen's County. Given the baptismal names of David Burke (after his paternal grandfather) he had considered using the name Burke in order to follow in the footsteps of his uncle the celebrated Edmund Burke who had achieved worldwide fame in musical spheres at the Royal Covent Garden Opera in London, the "Met" in New York, the Royal Opera in the Hague in Holland and as leading baritone with the late Dame Nellie Melba in Australia.

It would seem that a change of name really would have had nothing to do with Atkinson's success for all the same he the name Atkinson or Burke the astounding beauty of tone and the superb quality of production have been the real secret of this particular Canadian family's success in the singing world.
