THE NEW TIME-TABLE.

Sir,—A writer signed "Truth," in the Guardian of this morning, professes to have a great interest in the welfare of the P. E. Island Railway, and opposes the new time-table because it will, he thinks, result in a falling off in local traffic.
A little further on he does all he can to injure the road by declaring that it is unsafe to run engines more than double the weight of those first used on the road.

REPLY TO THE GUARDIAN.
Sir,—That the Guardian should take issue with opinions expressed in "The Valdictory" read at the commencement exercises at St. Dunstan's College I do not complain, though the editor's introductory remarks are by no means calculated to strengthen his contention. It may be difficult to decide which is the more remarkable event, the assassination of Caesar by the valdictorian Brutus of a Charlottetown College or his attempt at re-education by a Single Tax Charlottetown Antony. I freely acknowledge that in some respects the Guardian has persecuted Antony more faithfully than I have Brutus, for in imitation of that warrior he has thrust the sword of self contradiction into the very heart of his "single tax theory"—not once but several times. But to the point: "In short and simple terms" you misrepresent the valdictory when you say its position is "that what the earth produces, the earth or a portion of it," he cannot own a house that comes from it. The position taken by the valdictory is that if we admit as true Mr. George's principle that man has a right of ownership only to the products of his own labor, and if for this reason man cannot appropriate land, then this same conclusion must be drawn as regards household property, and indeed all other kinds of property.

Now, I take it for granted that Mr. George is an acknowledged exponent of the principles upon which the single tax theory is founded, and from the following we can easily see what these principles are: "On page 201 of Progress and Poverty: "The laws of nature are the decrees of the Creator. There is written in them no recognition of any right save that of labor." On page 5 of "The Condition of Labor," there occurs the following: "This right of property (private ownership) originating in the right of the individual to himself, is the only full and complete right of property. It attaches to things produced by labor, but cannot attach to things created by God." This is the principle to which exception was taken in the first part of the valdictory, and very justly so. Is not the material of a house a product, not of man's industry, but of nature, and therefore is there not (under the single tax) just as much reason for denying the right of private property in that material as there is in denying the right of private property in land, which after all is the material from which, through man's industry, a farm is made? Consequently if, with Mr. George, we deny the right of private property in land because it is not the product of man's industry, so likewise must we deny the right of private property in the material of all our other possessions. But the Guardian comes to the rescue by stating that if the owners of the earth—the people—were paid for the raw material of the house as that material lay on the ground, then it would rightly belong to the person who made the house. Now in the first place, according to Mr. George, we can own only what we produce by our labor. But the people did not produce the earth by their labor. How, then, can the single tax advocates call them the owners of the earth? At most they can only be considered as the users of the earth. But we can lawfully sell only what we strictly own. Therefore, under the Single Tax the people have no right to transfer even by sale the material of the house to the individual who consequently it would not be just in the private property of its reputed owner. We here see that the Guardian assumes what, according to Single Tax principles, it should repudiate, namely: that people can own what they have not produced, and Antony's sword is drawn again.

Veteran Gordon does not think Premier Peters has enough gumption to come in out of the wet; but Peters says there is really no necessity for him to be a parlor hero as he is not afraid of wet, or winter, or cold, or rheumatism, and that for all his fears of discomfiture or premature death, a perfect deluge might harmlessly descend on him. The secret is that he has secured a handsome macintosh from the McKay Woollen Co. Imitate the wisdom of the Premier and purchase one, particularly before the wet weather sets in.

PHRENOLOGY.—The Y. M. C. A. was well filled last evening on the occasion of the lecture on phrenology by Mrs. Jean Morris Ellis. Mrs. Ellis is a pleasing speaker and her lecture was both entertaining and instructive. The lecture was illustrated by portraits and charts, and the phrenological art was practically demonstrated. An examination of the heads of four well known citizens, Messrs. Walter P. Doull, C. B. Warren, W. C. Turner and Stephen Moore. Mrs. Ellis will give another lecture tonight dealing with the application of phrenology to practical affairs.
STABBED IN THE CHEEK.—About noon today a boy named William Mahar, 16 or 17 years of age, stabbed another boy named William Macdonald. The stabbing occurred on board a steam scow at Peake's No. 2 wharf. Macdonald says that Mahar threw an iron bolt overboard and blamed him for doing it. Macdonald denied the charge, whereupon Mahar called him names and stabbed him in the left cheek, near the eye, with a knife. Mahar was arrested, and the case will be before the Grand Jury this afternoon. Macdonald's father is pressman in the Patriot office, and Mahar's father is employed on the Colia.
