BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

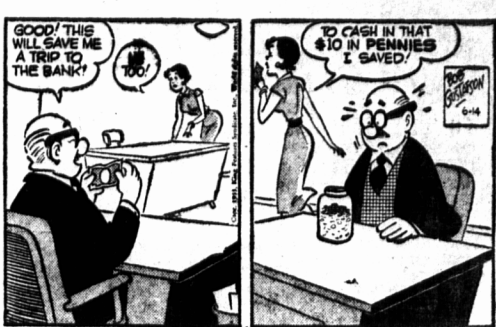

By Thornton W. Burgess

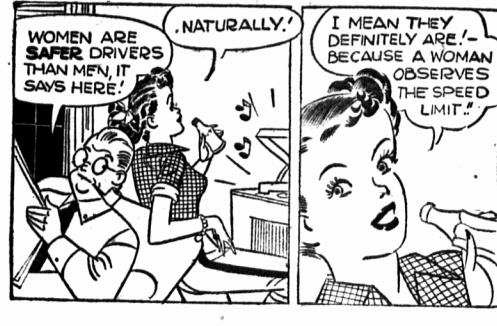

THE BIG FAMILY
No matter what may be the score, Love finds a place for just one more.
—Mrs. Rattles
Rattles the Kingfisher sat on his favorite perch on a branch of the big hickory tree overlooking the Smiling Pool. Peter Rabbit always felt reasonably sure of finding Rattles there, if he were not fishing along the Big River. Now Peter looked up at Rattles and ventured a question. "Where is Mrs. Rattles?" asked Peter.

BEGINNER'S LUCK
THE hand below had its humorous side—although East and West couldn't see it. The North player was a young woman who had lately learned the Blackwood convention—she said—when it came time to answer her partner's four-trump call, she had a lapse of memory, or something. (Perhaps it was simply an instance of the alleged feminine incapacity of counting up to one!) In any case, she gave out some very misleading information, but when it was all over it wasn't her partner who complained.
