

MR. AND MRS. EVERETT MACLEOD

51st Wedding Anniversary Observed By Clyde Couple

A special occasion was enjoyed recently when relatives and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Everett MacLeod in Clyde to help them celebrate their 51st wedding anniversary. The couple were married on September 30, 1914, at Zion Mince by Rev. George C. Taylor. They have three children and five grandchildren. Their daughters are Jean (Mrs. Earl Paquet) Summerside and Catherine (Mrs. Garfield Cummings) of Moncton, N.B. Their only son, Sterling, lives at home. An address was read by Russell Jewell, and a presentation made from the community. Mrs. MacLeod also read an address on behalf of the LOBA, with Mrs. Norman MacDonald making the presentation for this organization. Numerous individual gifts from relatives and friends were also received. Clair MacLeod, student minister of the Hartsville congregation, made a few well chosen remarks, mentioning the wonderful hospitality of this highly esteemed couple and the active part they had taken in community and church life over the past 50 years.

MARY HAWORTH

Money-Grabbing Mate Embarrasses His Wife

Dear Mary Haworth: Some time ago my husband decided it would be better if he did all the spending, including the grocery buying. He thought this would help to eliminate unnecessary outlay. Soon I found myself out with no cash at all, and this was most embarrassing, especially when asked by friends to go shopping or out for lunch. To remedy this I found a part-time job, weekends in the evening, when my husband would be home and the children would not miss me so much. I bring home about $25 a week, non-tax. This money was used to pay doctor and dentist bills, for clothing, household repairs, lamps, the children's allowances, etc.; but soon my husband was very cross because I didn't give it all to him. So then, of course, I gave him the money, hoping that he would give me, in return, a little more freedom in spending. But soon I was just as penniless as before. Today I told him I was going to demand $10 of my weekly earnings to use as I wish. He got angry and told me to hire a taxi to and from work, if that's how I feel. Some people might think he's cross because I'm employed; but it's not that. He would like me to work full time, but during the day, and hire a baby-sitter. However, I'd profit very little by that arrangement, and would be too tired, evenings, to help with the housework and be calm with the children. Please advise me, as I am heartsick about the situation.—E.E.

Dear E.E.: As I get the picture, you need help, first of all, in coming to grips with the clear realization of just how mean and stupid and unfair, and how financially incompetent your husband is, in his tightfisted grip on the family purse strings. His bad behaviour so far, in resolutely giving you a hard time, no matter how valiantly and ably you strive to cooperate with his policies and man the best of them, shows that he just can't bear to see you happy and thriving. When it happens, time and again, that you sensibly, resourcefully, considerably, diligently work your way out of a depressing stalemate he's invented to hamstring you, he thereupon comes up with still another angle to fence you in. And his only purpose, whatever his excuses, is to put a damper on your spirit, clip your wings and keep his foot on your neck, figuratively speaking. The fact is that, as his wife, housekeeper and the mother-caregiver of his children, you are his full partner in marriage. And as such, you are legally entitled to a partnership spending allowance, to personally invest in wifely aspects of family maintenance. I am sure that any qualified court of domestic relations would rule in your favor in that respect, if the issue were taken to court. So please understand, you don't have to settle for the ground-down, no-rights role he's assigning you, money-wise. Nor do you have to work for wages, full-time or part-time, to merit money in your pocket as his wife. He owes you just consideration on that score, and don't let him tell you differently. For advice, you urgently need firsthand intensive family relations counselling help, to provide insight, guidance and moral support, in deciding how to solve your marriage problem overall. About the present squabble, I think you'd be justified in keeping the weekend job and keeping the money, giving none of it to your husband, meanwhile arranging through a taxi agency to hire a woman driver to haul you regularly for a specified fee to keep the cost within bounds. In short, stand up to your husband, decisively.—M.H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Some Artists Have Talent To Turn Out Smart Hats

"And, Ellen," James added to his husbandly reminders this morning when we were about to set forth with a son and daughter-in-law to town, "you might have a look for a jacket for me. This one..." "...is past mending," we nodded. "A denim one," he suggested, "would shed the chaff and seeds best." "A lined denim, then?" "Yes, if you have time to spare."

"Well," the son observed with a chuckle, "it shouldn't take all morning to get a hat! And that, I understand is the purpose of her trip." "A hat!" James exclaimed. "She has hats up in the clothespress as good as the day they came from the store. Not the least bit shabby." The daughter-in-law suppressed a somewhat bewildered grin.

"Men are funny when it comes to fashions in women's wear, aren't they?" she commented in a low tone, when we were on our way to the truck in the yard. "They just don't seem to know anything about it, do they?" "Yes. Now, what size would your husband require in a jacket?"

"A number flashed on the screen of our mind, but whether it was that of some milestone up his years, the length of an addition to one of the buildings, or the sum total we had of piglets in a springtime gone, or his size, we could not be sure. "Forty-two" we said. "A big fish man" she nodded. "And, believe me, I am sorry but we have none in that size and kind on hand. No, but we will have, we hope."

"A hat this morning—so!" a milliner smiled when we waited in a shop... To be served by its "sides" is a pleasant experience. To be fitted by the head of the salon is to fancy you were a patron of one of the great shops of Paris. Even to look in the mirror, to see a more or less miracle effected by her clever fingers is relaxing. Merely by furring or lowering a brim a little, by adding or taking away a touch of color, or by the angle of adjustment on the customer's head, she can reach the desired effect. All artists do not draw or paint. Some lend their talents in other directions to improve and bring happiness to lives in their world about. Many interesting incidentals we gather in a spell of shopping. "A newly-wed" we remarked to the girlish one, who waited beside us, the attention of the clerk then wrapping the teakettle, our purchase. "Yes," she smiled. "A month married. We are quite settled in now. I had everything to house-keep with, but this: a potato-pounder."

"It's funny," we remember, "but one similar to that was among our first buyings together those days, and to our mind, the wooden masher was not the collectors' item it is now. But our mother-in-law was rather dubious of the new one. "It won't do its work so smoothly as the old one" she said...

"Well, happy days!" I wished the bride at parting. A day, we part with now—one very lovely and also kind.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night....
