France Offers Civil Service Posts To Moslems
 PARIS (Reuters) — France has offered important civil service posts in Algeria to Moslems in a move to weaken native support for Algerian rebels.
 The offer Thursday night is another step in the reform program which is going hand-in-hand with a major new offensive to crush the 15,000 independence-minded Moslem rebels.
 Robert Lacoste, French resident minister in Algeria, announced the plan for Moslems that Moslems service after he had conferred here with Premier Guy Mollet.
 Lacoste, who flew from Algeria Thursday morning, said the premier had assured him Algeria would be given "all the necessary military and economic aid" to the country. The resident minister, a virtual dictator under the new emergency regulations, has asked for 100,000 troops in addition to the army of 200,000 men already hitting the rebels.
 Lacoste told newspaper men after seeing Mollet that Moslems would be placed at the head of some civil service departments in Algeria — legally a part of France. He emphasized that military action is not the only way to halt the fighting, he said, and that economic and social reforms which are being applied.

THE WEEK AT S. D. U.

The veins of activity here at Saint Dunstan's are once again extended with that coursing heterogeneous conglomeration that we usually classify as the S.D.U. student body. Refreshed and revitalized by their Easter holidays, they are once again finding their old positions, manning the vital organs of campus activity, filling the comblike interstices of the residences, linking over into the corridors and other arteries of travel, and diffusing into classrooms.
 In short, the affairs of state, and the state of affairs, are by this time pretty well back to normal as the returning students stripped another page from their calendars as they entered their rooms, they are appearing here and there, now separated today from the bewildering final tangle of examinations, commencement, and graduation. In several fields this was the signal for an increase in activity. Dog-eared little booklets bearing the imposing title "Graduation Thesis" are appearing here and there; on Seniors' Row, desks are becoming snowed under by degrees with smudgy pages of manuscripts; underclassmen are busily tasting the savor of little-used complimentary adjectives as they tackle the bio-graphy of the graduating class; Graduation pictures, posed in the usual academic finery, are being posted here and there as if to contrast with and spur on the haggard looking figures toiling beneath them. In these circles, then, all activity seems to be now geared for the final drive.
BASKETBALL
 Somewhere in the midst of the vacation, a very dejected troupe of young men quietly returned to the campus from their mainland trip. You will remember that during our last seige of examinations, the S.D.U. hoop squad took leave of us in their first journey towards the Dominion Junior Basketball championship. The first stop enclined on the road map was Woodstock, N.B., and with indications of diminishing grandeur, Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver were also ticked off. Well, as fate will often have it, the road map was of little use because the squad was dumped in the first two-game, total-point series at Woodstock, and they knew the way home. The results of the first game showed the Saints in the Cellar, but the account of the game indicated that the team had made an excellent comeback in the second half. Those at home, as confident as anyone, thought that this was normal, and that the boys had merely taken some time to get used to the new court. As the anxious eyes scanned the sports pages after that first joust, to a pupil they thought that the team bearing the main gate was it known that the Saints just weren't able to scramble out of the cellar fast enough. Really, there can be no blame brought to bear on the squad, and after all, the experience that they gained on this trip will help them much more to make next year's Saint Dunstan's basketball team a power to deal with, for with this extra bit of seasoning under their jerseys, the boys are able to work that much better as a team, and after all, that is what will win them ball games.
 During the holidays, those of us who for one reason or several found ourselves stranded on the campus for the duration were treated to something of a miniature of the Holy Week panorama. Due to the fact that quite a few of our faculty were called away on one form of business or another, a service there was but a scattered few of the students present, our celebration of the Holy Week ceremonies had to be conducted on this diminutive scale. But even with our rites thus reduced to the simplest form, we were able to experience, evaluate, and apply the deep and reemphasized symbolism of the newly constituted liturgical changes. With the familiar ceremonies of the week brought more into keeping with the original chronological sequence of the events that they commemorate, the full import of the redemptive drama became more apparent to those of us who were following the cere-

W.C.T.U. NOTES

Theodore R. McKeldin, governor of the State of Maryland, who made the nominating speech for Dwight D. Eisenhower at the last Republican Convention in Chicago relates an incident that occurred on Her Majesty's Australian ship "The Sydney" in Baltimore harbor. Captain Buchanan and his officers had invited Governor McKeldin to dine on board ship. When the governor arrived, the British officers, General Carter from Camp Meade, and other American officers were standing around the bar waiting to toast the governor. "What will you have, governor?" Captain Buchanan asked.
 "Now of course, I am a teetotaler" came the reply. "I'll have ginger ale."
 Captain Buchanan gave the British officers a look and an order at the same time, by that look to the officer in charge of the bar. All the hard liquor was removed, and everyone toasted the governor with a double ginger ale.
 "Why", asked the governor, "do you have to drink this because I drink it?"
 Captain Buchanan replied, "In the tradition of the British navy, when the governor is on this ship, we'll drink what he drinks."
 "I had a similar experience," says the governor, "at a dinner with the President of the United States—the first time I ever had dinner in the White House. Ordinarily I turn my glass upside down at banquets, but here, I thought, 'It's not polite; I will let them serve it, but I won't drink it.'"
 "I was talking, unfortunately, at the time the wine was being poured, and I forgot myself and waved my hand over the top of the glass, low and said rather disgustedly, 'We know you; this is grape juice.'"
 "I asked the President upstairs in the library afterward, 'How did you know I didn't drink it?'"
 "He said, 'We find out about our guests before we invite them.'"
 "Well, I said, 'what intrigued me was the color of it.'"
 "We always take it care of that, too," President Eisenhower replied. "When we serve red wine, we have Concord grape juice for those who don't drink; when we have white wine—that's what we had tonight—we serve a white California grape juice."
 —Reported by C.S. Longacre.
 Most authentic reports by Washington newsmen indicate that White House refreshments are nonalcoholic, that even the "Champagne punch" used at major functions has no perceptible spike, but that wines are used when diplomatic protocol seems to "require" such toasts.

portunity to remind those of you who are within hiking distance of Charlottetown that the Saint Dunstan's Socials are once again in full swing. Les Alexander, we are told, used his lute sackcloth to polish up his sax, and Jimmy Coady has dusted the penitential ashes from his drums, so they're all set to roll. If you haven't misplaced your dancing shoes, why not plan to join the Saints at the Rollaway each Thursday afternoon from 3:30 until 5:30 from now until the end of the year. If you can't find those dancing shoes, come anyway, you'll never miss them.
 Until next week, then, greetings from Saint Dunstan's, and remember that a man isn't poor because he has nothing, but because he does nothing.

COMMUNITY CONCERT ASS'N. ANNOUNCEMENT

Miss Sarrae Endich (left) will sing at the Community Concert at Prince of Wales College on Monday evening, April 10 at 8:15. Miss Endich is a discovery of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood where she scored outstanding successes both in opera and as soloist with the Boston Symphony. She has since won new laurels on recital tour and as soloist with other major symphonies. Miss Endich is a soprano with a very bright future for she is endowed with a voice of truly beautiful and rich texture.
 The Community Concert Association have been fortunate to secure Miss Endich. Wesley Dalton (tenor) is scheduled to appear but owing to illness will be unable to do so. New members will be admitted to this, the last concert of the season, on producing receipts for membership at the door.

NEWSY NOTES

GOOD CROPS PREDICTED...
 It is a real pleasure after a long stormy winter to be able to bring a cheerful message concerning the main farm crops on Prince Edward Island for the summer of 1956. The following forecast is based on good old reliable data gathered over a period of many years. There are many indications that the best of the history of the Island, if we unite with all the great forces about us to make it so.
 The economy of our Province depends largely upon our farm crops; when these are below average, then feed is short for our stock and our returns are short at the end of the year. Everyone is interested in the weather, whose sum total climate and climate is a most important factor not only from day to day, but it determines the flowers and vegetables we grow in our gardens and the fruits and crops that can be produced with profit in our orchards and fields.
THE ISLAND SUMMER...
 The Island summer climate is the most favorably known far and wide and greater numbers of summer visitors from all over the American Continent are coming from year to year as they hear from those who have enjoyed a summer on "The Garden of the Gulf" and who appreciate from personal experience the uniform moderate temperatures of our summer. We find that this year it is 4.0 degrees F. lower than the average and therefore we expect a late spring season and bumper yields from the main field crops on Prince Edward Island.
 There have been a few exceptions during the 46 years. A year ago the indications were for an early spring. We were away during March and did not go carefully into the data. Most people will remember that cool dull weather predominated during April and May and that the planting season was very late; thus providing the observed conditions for the most bountiful crops of grass, clover, March is unusually warm, an early spring may be expected and lower yields are likely to follow. When moderate or average temperatures occur for March, average crop yields may be anticipated.
 We have learned from Mr. Warren Burns, Meteorologist at the Experimental Station, that the March mean temperature for 1956 was 22.8 degrees F. and that the average March mean temperature for the past 46 years was 26.8 degrees F. Our observations have indicated that a deflection from the March average mean temperature of more than 2½ degrees Fahrenheit, if higher, indicates an early spring or if lower a late spring. We find that this year it is 4.0 degrees F. lower than the average and therefore we expect a late spring season and bumper yields from the main field crops on Prince Edward Island.
