Rev. Eugene Murray performed the ceremony and celebrated the Nuptial Mass. Master Alfred White, brother of the bride, was server.

Mrs. James Croken, church organist, played the wedding march and several appropriate hymns were rendered during the ceremony by friends of the bridal couple.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked charming in a floor length gown of white satin, fitted bodice and sweetheart neckline. Her finger tip veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a Mary Queen of Scots bonnet and she carried a bouquet of red roses with white satin streamers.

She was attended by her sister Donna, who wore a floor length gown of pink taffeta, matching headdress and carried a nosegay of mixed flowers.

The groom was ably supported by his cousin Lloyd McCourt and the ushers were Messrs. Raymond White, brother of the bride, and Earl Clow, cousin of the groom.

The bride's mother wore a dress of turquoise crepe with matching accessories and a corsage of pink carnations.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride where upwards of fifty guests attended. The table was beautifully decorated with summer flowers and the two tier wedding cake topped with miniature bride and groom. The toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. Eugene Murray and responded to by the groom. A toast to the lumbering shape drawn well off the road about twenty-five miles out of Allington. Tiny faint streaks of wintry dawn lay on the horizon. He freed a hand and rubbed his eyes. He had imagined so many Arks lurking in the shadows through the interminable night he could hardly believe this one. He stopped his car about fifty yards behind the old van and shook Chiltern gently by the arm. "Do you see what I see? Ahead of us?" whispered Mark excitedly.

Chiltern peered out and sleep immediately vanished. That's it, sir," he cried. "There she is! His excitement fully justified Mark's. "Hold everything!" said Mark.

He opened the door and jumped out, sprawling full length beside the car.

Chiltern leaped after him as he got gingerly to his feet. "Are you hurt, sir? What happened?" asked the man anxiously.

"The old knees folded up. I guess I'm not an all night driver. Get in and wait. I'll be back."

Chiltern climbed back in the car and Mark shut the door quietly. He didn't stop to wonder why he was being quiet for. Whether he supposed that Lucy, if it were she, would throw in her gears and be off at sight of him.

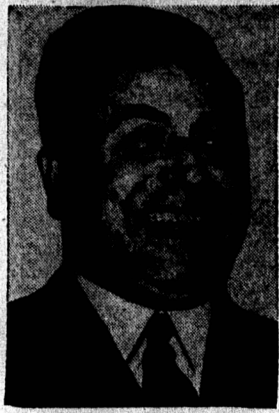

He crept steadily up on the Ark. The lines were unmistakable, even with its new coat of blue. Was the poor little idiot camping in the back as she had done so long ago? What did she mean by exposing herself to heaven knew what dangers beside the road?

He would look in the front first. If she wasn't there he would open up the back. He swung himself to the step, opened the door and saw her. She was slumped over the wheel, the soft fur coat framing her small gold face.

The most terrible fear he had ever known gripped him. He slipped into the seat beside her and lifted her in his arms. Her head fell back against him and she opened her eyes. He was almost ill with relief.

Labor Income At New Peak In June

OTTAWA, Sept. 20 — (CP) — Canadian labor income hit a new monthly peak of $683,000,000 in June, the Bureau of Statistics reported.
