Varia.

At last, some restriction is to be put on duelling among officers in the German army. The Emperor has ordered that all cases are to be brought before the colonels of regiments, who are to consider them seriously. Permission to fight is to be refused: 1st, when the quarrel has arisen out of a coffee-house or club-room brawl; 2d, when one of the parties has already fought three duels; and 3rd, when one of the parties is a married man with children. The cases in which duelling is to be allowed are: 1st, a public assault, to which apology is refused; 2nd, an insult to a lady, being a relation or the betrothed of the challenger. It will be remembered that the Prince Consort, during his lifetime, wished some such restrictions introduced into the English army, but the suggestion was overruled by the Duke of Wellington.

I think the following facts relating to the death of General Wolfe, the conqueror of Quebec, will be of interest to your readers. I came across them in a reference to an old copy (102 years old) of the London Chronicle:—

"It is a circumstance not generally known, but believed by the army which served under General Wolfe, that his death wound was not received by the common chance of war, but given by a deserter from his own regiment. The circumstances are thus related: The General perceived one of the sergeants of his regiment strike a man under arms (an act against which he had given particular orders), and knowing the man to be a good soldier, reprehended the aggressor with much warmth, and threatened to reduce him to the ranks. This so far incensed the sergeant that he took the first opportunity of deserting to the enemy, where he meditated the means of destroying the General, which he effected by being placed in the enemy's left wing, which was directly opposite the right of the British line, where Wolfe commanded in person, and where he was marked out by the miscreant, who was provided with a rifle piece, and unfortunately for this country, effected his purpose. After the defeat of the French Army, the deserters were all removed to Crown Point, which being afterwards suddenly invested and taken by the British army, the whole of the garrison fell into the hands of the captors, when the sergeant of whom we have been speaking was hanged for desertion, but before the execution of his sentence, confessed the facts above recited."

Windsor Castle—now the favorite abode in England of Her Majesty Queen Victoria—is one of the most historic piles in England. What famous scenes in history have been enacted there, and how gaily and sadness have each had their dwelling therein and how in the days gone by, its solid walls have echoed the stern shouts of battle, and the lighter festivities of the merry-makers at some royal pageant. Of this old castle there are very many stories told, a few of which I here give to your readers:

The very prettiest legend about Windsor is connected with the little garden at the foot of its proud tower, from which twelve counties can be seen in clear weather. A young Scotch prince, sent to France to be out of the way of his dangerous uncle, the Duke of Albany, was captured at sea, and sent to Windsor, where he remained a prisoner for eighteen years. In his poem, "The King's Quire," the prince has described how he fell in love with Lady Jane Beaufort, as she walked in the garden, unconscious of the admiration of the young prisoner. The garden, he says, had an arbour in the corner, and was ruled in with wands and close-knit hawthorn bushes; and in the midst of the arbour was "a sharp, green, sweet juniper."

The fairest or the freshest young flower That ever I saw methought before that hour, For which sudden abate anon astart The blood of all my body to my heart.

Then the enraptured prince describes the dress of the maiden; her golden hair fretted with pearls and rubies, emeralds and sapphires; on her head a chaplet of plumes, red, white, and blue, mixed with quaking spangles; about her neck a fine gold chain, with a ruby in the shape of a heart:

That a spark of fire so wantonly Seemed burning upon her white throat. But suddenly the fair fresh face passed under the bougts out of sight, and then began the lover's torments, and his day darkened into night. Altogether, a prettier love-story is not to be found in all the Castle history. James eventually married this incomparable lady, niece of the cardinal, and daughter of the Earl of Somerset, and took her back with him to Scotland. The accomplished prince was assassinated at Perth in 1437.

At the old desamery took place the parting between Richard II. and his young queen, Isabella, then only eleven years old. Froissart says, when the canons had chanted very sweetly, the king having made his offering, he took the queen in his arms and kissed her twelve or thirteen times, saying sorrowfully: "Adieu, madam, until we meet again." Then the queen began to weep, saying: "Alas, my lord, will you leave me here?" The king's eyes filled with tears, and he said: "By no means, Mamie; but I will go first, and you, ma chere, shall come afterwards."

After that the king and queen partook of wine and comfits at the desamery with their court. Then the king stooped down and fitted the queen in his arms, and kissed her at least ten times, saying: "Adieu, ma chere, until we meet again," and placing her on the ground, kissed her again.

"By our Lady," adds the chronicler, "I never saw so great a lord make so much of, or show such affection to, a lady, as did King Richard to his queen. Great pity it was they separated, for they never saw each other more."

Soon afterwards came the death-struggle of Pontefract, and the child-wife became a widow.

It was in King George's Chapel, that, in 1813, the body of King Charles I. was discovered. Charles II. had pretended to search for it, but probably did not wish to find it, or to incur the cost of a sumptuous monument. The corpse had been carried to the grave in 1648, in a snow-storm, and the dead monarch obtained secretly the name of "the white king," among his adherents, from the fact of the snow that day settling upon the pall. There was no service read over the body, as the Puritan governor forbade Bishop Prescott to use the Church of England prayers. On the coffin being opened, the face was found dark and discolored, the forehead and mouth had little of their muscular substance remaining, the cartilage of the nose was gone, but the left eye, though open and full of the first exposure, vanished almost immediately. The shape of the face was long, the nearly black hair was thick at the back of the head; the beard was reddish-brown. On examining the head, the muscles of the neck showed contraction, and the fourth cervical vertebra had been cut through transversely, leaving the severed surfaces smooth and even. The appearance was such as a blow from a heavy axe would have produced. In this chapel sleep many kings and queens, Jane Seymour among them, and Henry VIII., by his own desire, "near his true and loving wife, Queen Jane." The gigantic tomb, with six hundred and thirty-four statues, and forty-four "historics," which the tyrant ordered, were never put up. His former subjects had better things to think of.

A Valuable Importation of Pure-Bred Stock.

About the middle of last December the Hon. James Clow and Mr. J. Leslie Poole, of Montague, went up to Ontario for the purpose of purchasing some thoroughbred horses, cattle, sheep and poultry. They visited the establishments of some of the most noted importers and stock raisers of that province, and after considerable deliberation they made their selections, which certainly reflects much credit on their judgment. The horses purchased are undoubtedly noble animals, and were selected with the utmost care as to their individual merit and purity of descent. They were bought from the firm of Messrs. Robert Beith & Co., Bowmanville. The name of this firm has become famous for pure-bred stock. They are also known in Great Britain as the purchasers and importers of some of the best horses that have left their native land.

One of the horses purchased from that firm by Edward Poole is the English hackney stallion Gem. This horse was foaled in 1880, and imported by R. Beith & Co. in 1888; sire Gem of the Peak, by Mr. Sykes, by Tatton Sykes; his dam by Laughing Stock, by Stockwell; grand-dam by Sir Hercules, great-grand-dam by Bravo. Mr. Sykes won the Czarowitz Sir Tatton Sykes won the Two Thousand Guineas and the St. Leger. Laughing Stock took the £100 prize at the Royal Show at Wolverhampton, as the best thoroughbred stock. Stockwell won the Derby.

The Gem is a beautiful brown horse, standing 16 hands on short legs, possessing immense bone and muscular propelling power, well-jointed, with clean flat legs. He has the best of knee action, and carries himself in splendid form. His head is well set on his gracefully arched neck, and his eye is bright and sparkles with intelligence. He is quick in the spring and majestic in action. He is pronounced by competent judges to be one of the best and soundest horses of the day.

The Gem when three years old, won second prize at the Cheshire Agricultural Society Show at Crewe, in 1883, beating six others. In 1884 won the first prize at the same Society's Show at Northwich. In 1886, took the second prize at the Royal Manchester, Liverpool, and North Lancashire Agricultural Society's Show at Chester.

The other horse bought is the Clydesdale stallion General Burnett (751 Scotch Stud Book) foaled 1886, bred by James Smith, Pittengardner, Fordoun; imported 1888, sire El Amer; dam Maggie of Pittengardner. El Amer is full brother to the famous mare Zeyna, winner of the first prize at Stirling, second at Maryhill, and second at Glasgow in 1888. Darnley, grandsire of General Burnett, gained first prizes at the Glasgow stallion show in 1876 and 1877, first at the H. & A. S. shows in 1877 and 1884, and champion ups as the best Clydesdale stallion exhibited at the H. A. and S. shows in 1878 and 1884.

Many of the best breeding horses in Scotland were got by him, including Magregor, Top Gallant, Saugular, Blue Ribbon and others. General Burnett won second prize at the Royal Agricultural Society's Show in Aberdeen in 1888.

General Burnett is of a bay color. He is massive with compact body, deep chest, supported on short legs which he can handle in excellent style. He has plenty of bone and substance with nicely moulded quarters, coupled with sound feet, and legs feathered with long and soft silky hair. He has good spirits yet kind and gentle in disposition and is decidedly a horse of rare merit and every way suited to our Island farmers and stock raisers.

Both horses can be seen at any time at the stable of Mr. J. Leslie Poole, Lower Montague.

As the writer has not yet seen the cattle, sheep and poultry, he cannot at present give a description of them, but will most likely do so on some future occasion.—Con.
