People find just the help they so much need, in Hood's Sarsaparilla. It furnishes the desired strength by purifying, vitalizing and enriching the blood, and thus builds up the nerves, tones the stomach and regulates the whole system. Read this:

"I want to praise Hood's Sarsaparilla. My health run down, and I had the grip. After that, my heart and nervous system were badly affected, so that I could not do my own work. Our physician gave me some help, but did not cure. I decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Soon I could do all my own housework. I have taken

Personal Sarcasm Generally Don't Pay.

There is a great temptation to people somewhat gifted in that direction to indulge in sarcasm; and it sometimes requires considerable determination to resist doing it, but as a general rule it don't pay.

When I first entered good old Dartmouth college I was appointed to represent our class in a debate with a member of each of the other classes, and the Junior, opposing disputant, thought he would (and did) make considerable laughter at our expense, by quoting Milton's "Paradise Lost."

He finally closed by saying that "for an angel, I had accomplished very little in the way of argument."

I brought down the house with cheers by simply replying that "I believed I had accomplished one thing, that had never been accomplished but once before in the history of the world, and that was when an angel opened the mouth of Balaam's ass."

During the rest of his college course it was not uncommon to hear him called out to on the foot-ball ground, "Go it, Balaam.

"But he never spoke to me again from that day, and probably remembered it against me all the rest of his life.

It would have been better not to have said it.

Sarcasm, generally don't pay, unless it be of the pleasant kind used by an Irishman to his employer—a coal dealer—who proposed to discharge him because "He couldn't learn him anything."

"Well, I've learned one thing since I've been with you," said Pat. "What's that?" "That eighteen hundred make a ton."

Pat was retained.—Geo. T. Angell.

THE CLAIM WAS MET.

An Old Man's Prayer and How It Was Answered.

"No," said the lawyer, "I shan't press your claim against that man; you can get some one else to take the case or you can withdraw it, just as you please."

"Think there isn't any money in it?"

"There would probably be a little money in it; but it would come from the sale of the little house the man occupies and calls his 'home.' But I don't want to meddle with the matter, anyhow."

"Got frightened out of it, eh?"

"Not at all."

"I suppose the old fellow begged hard to be let off?"

"Well, yes, he did."

"And you caved in, like!"

"Yes."

"What in creation did you do?"

"I believe I shed a few tears."

"The old fellow begged you hard, you say?"

"No, I didn't say so; he didn't speak a word to me."

"Well, may I ask, whom did he address in your hearing?"

"God Almighty."

"And he took to praying, did he?"

"Not for my benefit in the least. You see I found the little house easily enough, and knocked on the outer door, which stood ajar, but nobody heard me; so I stepped into the little hall, and saw through the crack of the door a cozy sitting room, and there on the bed, with her silver head high on the pillows, was an old lady who looked for all the world just like my mother did the last time I saw her on earth. Well, I was on the point of knocking again, when she said: 'Come, father, now begin, I am all ready.' Down on his knees by her side went the old white-haired man, still older than his wife, I should judge; and I couldn't have knocked then for the life of me. Well, he began. First he reminded God that they were still His submissive children, mother and he, and no matter what He saw fit to bring upon them they should not rebel against His will. Of course it was going to be hard for them to go out homeless in their old age, especially with poor mother so sick and helpless; and oh, how different it might have all been if only one of the boys had been spared! Then his voice kind of broke, and a thin, white hand stole out from under the coverlid, and moved softly over his snowy hair. Then he went on to repeat that nothing could ever be so sharp again as the parting with those three sons—unless mother and he should be separated! But at last he fell to comforting himself with the fact that the good Lord knew that it was through no fault of his own that mother and he were threatened with the loss of their dear little home, which meant beggary and the almshouse—a place they prayed to be delivered from if it could be consistent with God's will. And then he quoted a multitude of promises concerning the safety of those who put their trust in the Lord. In fact, it was the most thrilling plea to which I ever listened. At last he prayed for God's blessing on those about to demand justice."

Then the lawyer continued more slowly than ever: "And—I—believe I had rather go to the poorhouse myself to-night, than to stain my hands and heart with the blood of such a persecution as that."

"Little afraid to defeat the old man's prayer, eh?"

Bless your soul, man, you couldn't defeat that prayer. I tell you he left it all subject to the will of God; but he claimed that we were told to make known our desires to Him. But of all the pleading I ever heard, that moved me most. You see I was taught that kind of thing myself in my childhood, and why I was sent to hear that prayer, I am sure I don't know—but I hand the case over."

"I wish," said the client, uneasily, "I wish you hadn't told me about the old man's prayer."

"Why so?"

"Well, because I want the money the place would bring; I was taught the Bible straight enough when I was a youngster, and I hate to run counter to what you tell me about it. I wish you had not heard a word about it, and another time I would not listen to petitions not intended for my ears."

The lawyer smiled.

"My dear fellow," he said, "you are wrong again. It was intended for my ears, and yours, too; and God Almighty intended. My old mother used to sing about 'God moves in a mysterious way,' I remember."

"Well, my mother used to sing it, too," said the client, as he twisted the claim papers in his fingers. "You can call in the morning, if you like, and tell 'mother and him' the claim has been met."

"In a mysterious way," added the lawyer.

A New Fireproof Paper.

A valuable fireproof paper is now made of ninety-five parts of asbestos fiber of the best quality, washed in a solution of permanganate of calcium and then treated with sulphuric acid. After the fiber has been thus treated, five parts of ground wood pulp are added and the entire mass is placed in an agitating box, with some lime water and borax. After a thorough mixing the material flows out into an endless wire cloth, whence it enters the usual paper-making machinery. Paper produced in this way will resist even the direct influence of a flame and may be placed in a white heat with impunity.

A Physical Culture Teacher Tells How to Keep Well.

"Take care of your chest," said the physical culture teacher within the hearing of a New York Sun reporter, "and the rest of your body will take care of itself. The chest is the chief thing to be remembered. Keep it well raised and your head, spine, shoulders will involuntarily assume their proper positions without any effort on your part. The cry from parent and teachers used to be "Throw your shoulders back!" But this mistaken notion is now completely exploded. The shoulders have nothing to do with correct posture. It is all the chest, and its elevation or depression will regulate the rest of the body. The chest is the seat of all things spiritual, elevating and ennobling. Bring it into prominence and you bring into prominence the best qualities of your nature.

"It has been said that whatever psychological attribute is most marked in a human being is correspondingly most marked in his physical being. If he's a glutton his stomach is most in evidence; if a scholar or brain-worker, his head is sure to be thrust well forward, but if he preserves a proper intellectual balance he walks with his chest in advance of the rest of his body. It is curious, too, how one may really influence his own mental condition in this way. Just try and see how impossible it is to say, 'Oh, how happy I am!' with sunken chest and spent breath. One involuntarily lifts his chest and takes a good, long breath when he says anything optimistic, and brave, for if he doesn't he might just as well say, 'Have mercy on us miserable sinners.' The effect is the same. There is no surer cure for the 'blues' or like maladies than merely lifting the chest and taking a good, long breath. It scares away all the bugaboos of pessimism."

TRACK OF A SAND WAVE.

It is Creeping Slowly Over Woods and Farms in Northern New York.

Between Carthage and Stislingville, in Jefferson county, N. Y., there is a stretch of country where the sand drifts like snow, making great banks and blinding the eyes of those who look up-wind. It is a desolate, barren region, where the soil is only as deep as the roots of the grass.

Some time or other cattle turned loose to pasture on the southwest side of a high hill there made a trail along the face of it. Their hoofs wore through the thin sod, and the wind caught up the particles of sand and sent them spinning up the hillside. Tracks of this old trail may still be seen down in the hollow, but most of it has been blown away. The whole hill became a wave of sand, and now it is rolling down grade toward the house of one of the three shanty setlers along the road. It is certain to bury the house some day under a wave of sand, from 25 to 35 feet high.

The old Alexandria road is covered in one place with the sand to a depth of three feet. The wagon that passes over the road in the morning leaves a deep rut where the wheels sank in. The tread of the horses is heavy, but at night the sand has sifted in, and there remains scarcely a sign of travel.

The great wave of sand kills everything before it, buries the fences, and covers the stumps and bushes. Some roots and sticks show through, telling where the bushes have been. A patch of woods beyond the reach of the main wave has a fence along its southern face over a hill that slopes down among the trees. A fairly level stretch leads from the foot of the hill to the south. On this level sandy spots show. Behind the fence is a bank of sand, the smother from the sand patches down on the level. The woods, the hollow, in which they lie, and the spring will be buried before long by the hill.

And He Stayed Put.

A weak-looking, over-dressed woman sat in a Detroit street car the other day and with her a badly over-dressed and badly-spoiled boy of about 4 years, who seemed inclined to do nothing but squirm and wriggle and to do everything his weak-willed mother told him not to do. It was muddy and the boy's feet were covered with slime and mud from the street.

"You must sit down, Reginald," said his mother; you'll get mud on the dress of the lady next to you."

But Reginald declined to sit still, and his mother said:—

"Reginald do you hear me?"

"'Course I do."

"Then why don't you mind?"

"Don't want to."

Then he began to squirm more vigorously than before.

"Reginald, why don't you mind mamma?"

"'Cause I don't want to."

"Is that the way to talk to mamma?"

"It's the way I talk."

"Mamma is ashamed of you. Don't you see that you are getting mud all over that lady's dress?"

"Don't care if I am."

"You naughty, naughty boy. Now sit down and behave yourself."

"Won't."

"Won't, eh?"

The speaker was the lady into whose lap Reginald had deliberately and defiantly planted one of his muddy feet. She was a vigorous, spirited looking woman about 40 years of age.

"Won't, hey?" she said again, as she grabbed the dazed Reginald by his velvet collar and laid him across her lap.

"Won't, hey?" she asked for the third time, as she brought her good right hand down again and again with telling force on the awe-stricken youngster.

"I'll let you know what you will an' what you won't do!" she said jerking Master Reginald to a sitting position and plumping him down on the car seat.

"Now you set there an' don't you budge! You hear me! If your ma can't make you mind I kin. Now you stay right where you're put!"

And he did, both he and his mother seeming to be too badly dazed to make any objection to a proceeding that delighted the hearts of all of the other occupants of the car.

Growing the Bermuda Lily.

"The Bermuda Lily should be plantted in deep pots," writes Eben E. Rexford in Ladies Home Journal. "Put in a shallow layer of soil over the drainage material when you pot the bulbs of this plant, and on this place the bulb, which should be covered lightly. Leave this until a stalk starts. Then fill in, as this stalk reaches up, until the pot is full of compost. I would not advise the use of any fertilizer after bringing a plant to the light if the compost in which it was planted contained an ordinary amount of nutriment. Development is quite likely to be sufficiently rapid in ordinarily rich soil, and the application of a stimulant will so hasten it that the plant will be forced beyond healthy limits. Watch the plants when in the cellar, and give them a little water now and then if needed. Aim to keep the soil moist—never wet. When you bring them up do not place them at once in a very warm room. A room adjoining one in which there is a fire is better for them, if it is frost-proof, than one in which the heat is likely to run up to a high figure. When they come into bloom be sure to keep them as cool as possible if you want the flowers to last."

At Rehearsal.

Stage Manager—I thought I told you to hire only handsome men as supes?

Assistant—Well, so I did.

"Why, three of them have carroty hair and the rest turn up noses!"

"Well, they're vegetable supes, you know."—Kate Field's Washington.

The bubonic plague that has fallen upon the people of India has some features in common with the great plague that devastated Europe at various times in the Middle Ages, and that in the seventeenth century caused such havoc in London. It is also causing panics like to those which the ancient chroniclers tell about, and people are reported to be fleeing from Calcutta by thousands. It is unlikely, however, that any such disaster will now fall upon India as history tells of. Medical science and the sanitory inspector can meet and down even the worst of epidemics.
