Cornwall Garmet Clubbers Display Year's Handiwork

Achievement Day of Cornwall 4-H Garment Club was held recently in the school with a large number of friends and relatives in attendance. The chairman, Wendy Wilson, opened the meeting with the singing of "O Canada" and a welcome to the guests.

The outline of the 1st year work was given by Marcella Donahue and aprons were modelled by: first, Monica MacPhail; second, Wendy Taylor; and third, Marcella Donahue. The second work was outlined by Brenda Donahue, and slips were modelled by: first, Marilyn Hyde; second, Heather MacDonald; and third, Audrey Dawson; and fourth, Brenda Donahue. The 4th year was outlined by Iris Herlihy, and the dresses were modelled by: first, Nancy MacDonald; second, Iris Herlihy and Gloria Godfrey; third, Gloria Dawson; and suits were modelled by: first, Gloria Dawson; second, Wendy Wilson.

After the prize winners were chosen, complimentary remarks were expressed by the judges on the fine work done by all members during the year.

Following are descriptions of the prize winning dresses and suits made by the senior girls: first, Wendy Wilson, 2-piece white boucle suit with straight skirt and jacket with three-quarter sleeves, fully lined; Gloria Dawson, 2-piece taupe wool suit with slim skirt, collarless lined jacket and set-in sleeves; Nancy MacDonald, a pink flowered dress with a rounded neckline and fitted bodice, sleeveless with gathered skirt and sash; Iris Herlihy, a light green cotton dress with contrasting brown sash, sleeveless, with rounded neckline, fitted bodice and gathered skirt; Gloria Godfrey, a 4th year prize-winner, was unable to attend on account of illness, so a lot in the picture. She had made a yellow cotton dress, similar in style to the others.

Gifts were presented to the instructors in appreciation for their efforts, by the club members.

MARY HAWORTH

Wife Has Good Reason To Trust Her Husband

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For five years I was getting telephone calls from a female voice saying that my husband was running around with another woman.

When I approached my husband with this happening, he passed it off with the comment that he couldn't understand who would do a thing like that.

Finally I dawned that I was getting these calls while he was working in a certain part of his territory. Immediately he said it must be someone in this area who disliked him for one reason or another.

I hadn't received a call in quite some time and life was proceeding nicely, until two months ago, when my husband was home, on his day off. A female voice on the phone identified herself as calling for a certain firm, wanting to speak to John.

With a thunder clap kind of premonition, I stayed on the extension while John answered upstairs. I overheard a torrent of endearments addressed to him. I went upstairs, took the phone from his hand and hung up on the voice. John told me he was glad that she had been chasing him for six years, threatening to "tell" me, and he didn't want to hurt me.

It seems she wanted him to divorce me, leave the kids and marry her, and was very annoyed that he wouldn't. She had the nerve to call back and ask to meet me, to talk things over! I told her off in blunt language and haven't heard from her since, except for letters and pictures she took of him through the years, and also some junk gifts he had given her, all of which she is now sending me.

She's been to his office and tries to waltz him at the parking lot. She is 10 years our senior, has a husband unaware of her antics, and also grown children. Should I inform her husband when I get her next letter? Or is it better ignored?

Don't such women ever give up? Can one trust one's husband ever again? He promises or bended knee it won't happen again. We've been married 19 years. The shock is hard to take. Please advise.

DEAR S. R.: As for trusting your husband ever again, on the score of fidelity to you, I should think his performance to date, in respect to the other woman, offers proof that you can rely on the honesty and durability of his intention to be your partner for keeps, even if his feet sometimes slip from the "straight and narrow" path of marital rectitude.

ELLEN'S DIARY

A First Shearing Day And A Summer Begins

"This June is surely giving us great growing weather. Ellen" James remarked this morning, pleased with the promise of the day, new-come. "I never saw crops do better. Why the grass is actually getting ahead of the cattle. And as for the grain, it looks as though every grain grew!"

Attractive pasturals these days beg our attention: the herd, that in little companies pastures here and there in the fields. Now we see them drink at the stream or graze there in the aldered shade. Now they rest in a picture of content against a green slope, or again they are outlined on a far hilltop against a hazy June sky. In the orchard those ewes with babes of lambs, and others awaiting theirs, stay. The young play their games and run their races in the bright of the morning, or when the day commences to reach out long fingers of shadow across the fields and the sun goes home.

Today brought an initial shearing, the setting in the shade of the old spruces by the orchard. One heard the occasional bleat of a momentary parting, this thin-treble of the lambkin, the mature and comforting call of the ewe - the plaintive, "Oh dear, whatever does this mean?" of the young, the "There, there, child, don't fret! In a matter of minutes I shall be with you again" of the ewe.

"So you have a black lamb in the flock" a caller looking on, offered with a smile. "It's a long time since I last saw one. As I remember it, any black fleeces were always reserved for the men's socks and mitts. The natural dark shade was supposed to be warmer than those knit from the dyed yarn. The shearing was always something of an event in our family, as was also the day the women washed the fleeces."

What a day, or indeed more, the tantalizing thought came, we could have on this farm at that washing, if those olden days ways still obtained. James, bless him, would set up a tripod for us down by the stream, and we would call together all the have the sticks and birch bark ready for the fire-kindling there. We would call together all the women of the name, including Gage's little bride. And what a nice time we would have. The

Breadalbane W.I. 33rd Anniversary Is Celebrated

The Breadalbane Women's Institute recently sponsored a social evening in the Breadalbane school, in celebration of their thirty-third anniversary.

Mrs. Alex J. MacDonald introduced Brenton Wood who showed many beautiful slides of his tour to the Holy Land, and of various interesting places visited enroute and when homeward bound. A few of the highlights were views of the garden of Gethsemane, the wailing wall and the Jordan River. Enroute home he visited Venice, Italy. Mr. Wood's commentary was very interesting and informative. A vote of thanks was extended to him. The members of the WI then served refreshments.
