The bidding: North East South West 1♣ 3♦ 3♠ Pass

Opening lead—jack of clubs. The player who strings along with percentages is bound to show a profit in the long run. The bid or play that is probably the best in a given situation is the one to make, all hunches to the contrary notwithstanding.

This general philosophy can be profitably applied at the bridge table. A player should follow the indicated line of probability. Sometimes this art is also called technique. Call it whatever you will, the pursuit of the underlying principle is one of the most important assets a bridge player can own.

South was playing five diamonds. West led the jack of clubs, which East overlooked with the queen to lead another high club. Then East shifted to the king of hearts. Declarer took it in dummy and had to make the rest of the tricks to bring home the contract.

He cashed two high trumps and led a low spade to the ace. East dropped the jack. New South was faced with the proposition of whether East's jack was a singleton or whether East had been dealt J-10 of spades alone.

Had declarer cashed a high spade in dummy at this point, he would have been defeated. He would have had to lose a heart trick eventually and go down one.

But South thought the matter over carefully and decided there was a strong probability that the jack play was on the level and it was a singleton.

So he returned to his hand with a trump and led the nine of spades. West ducked (best play) and South finished. Making five.

Twelve of East's cards were marked by the bidding and previous play. He was known to have started with two diamonds and (very likely) seven clubs, as well as the K-Q of hearts and jack of spades.

The odds were great that East's thirteenth card was one of the many missing hearts rather than specifically the ten of spades. It was only a probability, it is true, but probabilities are what should be followed.

All Out Nuclear War Effects To Be Studied

By JOE HALL

WASHINGTON (AP)—A United States congressional subcommittee on radiation is turning next month to the effects of any all-out nuclear war. The group has just completed a week of intensive hearings on fallout from atomic bomb tests already conducted.

Representative Chet Holifield (Dem. Calif.), chairman of the Senate-House atomic energy committee, says the group will receive public testimony in early June on what the use of huge nuclear weapons would mean in a world conflict.

Meanwhile, the subcommittee hopes to analyze and study the dozens of scientific papers submitted in the hearings concluded last Friday.

The scientists who participated, representing both government and private agencies, seemed to reach wider areas of agreement than in 1957 hearings. But they freely conceded that on some points they just did not know enough to agree or disagree.

MAJOR FINDINGS

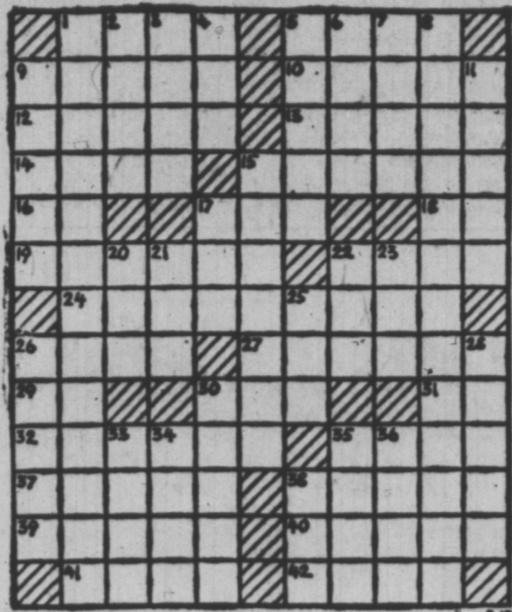

These were major findings on which there seemed to be general agreement:

1. So far about 90,000,000 tons of fission yield have been produced in blast set off by the U.S., Russia and Britain. Of this total, the U.S. and Britain have set off 65,000,000 tons, Russia 25,000,000.
2. Much more of the fallout deposits on the Northern Hemisphere than on the southern.
3. The fallout is dropping to earth far more rapidly than previously predicted. This is especially true of radioactive debris produced in massive Russian fourth tests last October.
4. When all of the fallout now in the stratosphere from previous
