

Selected Story.

When the Ship Comes in.

(CONCLUDED.)

The next morning the woman is again loitering around the wharves with the same agonized inquiry. She again puts the question to the wharfmen, and again receives only the same answer. Then, as before, she seeks the office of the brig owners, still accompanied by her little girl, and asks:—

'Has the brig Good Luck come in yet?'

'Not yet, ma'am.'

She sighs and looks out of the window at the shipping. She says she will wait for Tawman, and sits down.

When Mr. Tawman comes in, as usual, he greets her very kindly, and kisses the little girl and says:—

'I'm sorry the brig isn't in yet!'

'Will it be in to-day?'

'I hope so.' And he goes behind his desk and looks over his letters. He has not long been engaged in his correspondence, when a scream from the woman startles him.

She has risen, and is pointing excitedly out of the window.

'Here is a ship coming in! Look! look!'

'That's not it,' said a clerk; 'that's a schooner.'

'Oh, no!' adds Mr. Tawman; 'that's not the Good Luck.'

'It is! It is!' She darts from the office, dragging the child after her, runs across the crowded street, across the bustling wharf, out to the very edge of the water.

Mr. Tawman rushes to the window, opens it, and calls to her. To no purpose, however. All the clerks cluster around the window, to watch her.

'The woman is mad!' says one, 'She's going to drown herself.'

Tawman says quietly to the telegraph operator:—

'It's the Mary.'

The schooner is being towed up the river by a tug. She is making preparations to anchor in the stream opposite the wharf. All this time Mrs. Selter is standing in the midst of a crowd of excited people, waving her handkerchief, and the little girl is waving hers.

'Look! look! there! There's a man overboard!' cries one of the clerks. A cry of alarm goes up from the wharf.

'Thunder!' exclaims Mr. Tawman, now thoroughly aroused. 'What does that mean?'

'He's swimming like a fish,' says a clerk.

'He has landed. Hark at the cheers!'

'God of mercy! look! look!' shouted the operator. 'She is hugging him; so is the little girl. It's Captain Selter!'

'Thank God!' exclaimed Tawman; and pray heaven she may not sink under the shock. Poor woman! How she clings to the drenched man. Dear! dear!'

Then he puts on his hat and runs down the stairs like a boy, and darts over to where husband and wife and child are, united and happy.

'The Good Luck's come in!' yelled Tawman, lustily.

'Ah!' he exclaims, shaking the captain by the hand, and not caring for the gaping, and wondering crowd all around him; 'this is good luck, isn't it? eh? Did you get my telegram?'

When the man can speak, he answers:—

'Yes.'

'I planned it all!' chattered old Tawman. 'You see I got a despatch, yesterday, from the Breakwater, saying that Captain Selter had been picked up on a raft by the schooner Mary, bound in, and that you were coming up by rail from Lewes. I telegraphed back word for you to come up in the schooner, for a certain purpose. The shock would have been worse to her if I hadn't. I told her when I put her in the car yesterday, that the brig would come in, and come in it did. Over to the office every one of you, and after dinner and dry clothes, Cap. we'll have a talk about business. Come on!'
