Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Books were so hard to come by when Lincoln was a boy, that he made lengthy notes from his borrowed treasures, and in this way built an MSS library. He wrote on boards and the back of shovels when paper was lacking. His slate was a wooden shovel, his pencil a charred stick and a cooper's shavings gave him light for his evening studies. Yet this poor backwoods boy became President of the United States, and one of the world's greatest men.

The chief point of interest in the hardback or matted fish is that it builds well constructed nests of straw, leaves, and grass. The female lays her eggs in these nests and the male waits near until they are hatched, and the young family can put to rest.

In the collection of the British Museum may be seen a most remarkable nest, which is the work of some species of wasp at present unknown.

It is made of finely kneaded clay and so plastic that it can be moulded into various shapes. This curious nest measures 13 inches in length by 9 inches in width, and is filled with combs that are flat, split, hoofs of the elk spreads widely apart when the foot is placed on the ground, coming together again with a loud snap when the animal lifts it up to walk.

An interesting find of buried treasure has recently been credited to a mole. Coins were seen shining in the earth of a freshly dug molehill at Penicuik, New Edinburgh, and a search showed that the mole had driven his shaft through a hoard of old coins of the date of Edward I.

Birds are the least liable to accidents of any living creature. Why? Because the air in which most of their movements take place is almost entirely free from obstacles to flight at a height of 400 feet above the ground.

Among the wild fourfooted animals, only the ruminants with large horns and long legs seem commonly liable to accidents. Cases of stags dying with interlocked antlers are not uncommon. Deer and mountain goats sometimes miss their footing and fall and break their limbs.

Among wild quadrupeds it is difficult to name one which cannot see at night. Yet naturalists tell us that these animals show a nervousness induced by darkness. They have been known to break fold during the night and scatter over the fields. Nobody knows why they become panicky, but it is a well established fact that they are liable to these frights at night.

Horses are affected in the same manner, yet strange to say cattle never suffer from night fright.
