NATIONAL PLEASING RELIEF AFTER MANY DAYS.

How a Queens County Man Found Permanent Healing.

His Own Experience Tells Fully and Freely some Truths which all Readers of this Paper Should Know.

Here and there, in almost every town of our province, are "chronic" cases over which doctors disagree; cases that become worse year after year. It is to reach such that the gentleman to whom these lines refer, and whose portrait is here given, has written the story of his case.

Mr. Branscomb's home is a Chipman, Queens Co., N. B. It was there that a representative of the Groder company called upon him, Sept. 1st, of the present year. His greeting was most cordial. He gladly acknowledged his thanks, giving expression to the following statement:

"It is five years since I first became afflicted with a form of indigestion. Last winter it became more severe, developing into chronic diarrhoea. I cannot tell you how much I suffered for six long weeks. It seemed as though relief could not be found. You will remember how I told you of my condition and asked your advice about taking a bottle of GRODER'S SYRUP. You told me that the medicine was a laxative and might not meet my needs. I delayed buying for a few hours until I began to hope that it would help me. Even my clothes seemed a burden because of bloating of stomach. It was with difficulty that I kept about sufficiently to attend to my business.

But I am a well man now from the use of your remedy. In three days after I bought GRODER'S SYRUP the terrible pain and distress across my stomach were removed. My bowels rapidly assumed a natural, healthy condition. Now I eat and drink as well as I ever could. I have gained constantly in flesh since March last. I am perfectly cured. It seems a duty for me to state my case fully, that others who suffer as I did may know where to find a cure."

Truly yours, E. A. BRANSCOMB.

GEORGE ELIOT AND GEORGE SAND

Two Great Novelists Alike in Some Respects, Wholly Different in Others.

George Eliot has been dead a quarter of a century, but there is no sign that her popularity is decreasing or that her novels are not read quite as generally as they were twenty years ago. Her work is assured in English literature, and there is no reason to doubt that her novels will be read as long as the Victorian literature is remembered.

In many respects she is the English counterpart of George Sand, but she did not possess the vivacity, the rapidity of production or the fickleness of the brilliant French woman. The latter never had to be forgiven by her countrymen, but was only the commanding genius of George Eliot that finally compelled the austere British public to endorse the fault of Marian Evans. In the last dozen years of her association with George Sand she was accepted in certain social and literary circles as his wife. She was not his wife, and it is absurd for her biographers to call her so.

But the name of George Eliot is her own by adoption, and she has immortalized it. The world is no longer concerned with her faults and errors. They are a part of our common humanity. But her splendid genius must still kindle admiration, must still instruct, amuse and bless mankind.

Right novels in twenty years, a few poems, and some minor writings sum up the work of George Eliot, as compared with the 200 volumes of George Sand. But of George Sand's immense production there are probably not more than eight that will hold a place in literature. Nor from the financial point of view and the 200 volumes in her money that the eight George Sand estimated that she had gained a million francs—$200,000—by her literary labors. For "Daniel Deronda" alone, the last of her novels, George Eliot was paid the sum of £40,000, or $200,000—while she had made as much for "Middlemarch," and for her first success all her novels brought her large sums. When she died in 1880 she was a very rich woman. Neither Scott nor Dickens was better paid than she, considering the amount of production and her years of labor.

The critics are by no means agreed as to which is the greatest of the two. The exquisite finish and artistic form of "Silas Marner" have given the point to that superb story in the minds of many. It is a masterpiece of art, and it is the men of letters, that story would be called George Eliot's best. From point of popularity, however, the account book shows that "Adam Bede" has the greatest sale, and hence must be more popular. "Romola" has a very large number of admirers, and it has been said that it is the best historical novel ever written. I am not one of those who think so, and its erudition often oppresses me. In fact, in spite of the critics and the general readers alike, I think "Middlemarch" and "Daniel Deronda" the most interior of the novels. Foremost is "Middlemarch," the greatest novel written in the nineteenth century, excepting, perhaps, "The Newcomes."

It is a prose epic, a wonderful picture of English rural life. The canvas is large, but the figures are living. Mr. Brooke, Casaubon, Dorothea, Rosamond, Vinney, Ladysgue, Caleb Garth, Will Linslaw and a dozen others are as real as any in history. The story throughout is one of immense power, and it is most Shakespearean in its localities. No modern writer has equalled it. It is one of the masterpieces of our time.

George Eliot was a woman of lofty character and noble ambition. Above all things she loved truth and adhered to it. Educated in religious thought after the strictest set of Puritanism, her commanding intellect refused to be bound in any such trammels. She perhaps went to an extreme in bursting away from these bonds, but she nevertheless insisted on being true to her convictions. She was a faithful servant of her race, and gave to the world lessons in wisdom and duty that are ever inspiring.

Streets With Old Names. The corporation of Colchester have been buying themselves in effecting some ancient place and street names—described as "unreasonable," and in some instances offensive, and replacing them with names more acceptable to the refined ears of these times. Thus "Sole Lane" (Colchester) is being replaced by "Serpentine Lane," while "Cathedral Lane" has become "St. Alban's Road," "High Street" "G. Howard Lane," "Pigeon" and the like have, however, not yet been subjected to a similar process of purification.

On turning to the list of streets in Hatfield, Ontario (1798), we find many such names as "Bandyling Lane," "Barefoot Alley," "Cuthbert Lane" (Colchester), "Deadman's Place," "Dunghill Lane," "Dark Entry," "Foul Lane" and "Hog Lane," together with "Dirt Lane" and "Dirt Lane." In the then fashionable localities of Longacre and Leicester fields—and no fewer than eight "Frying Pan alleys" in various parts of the city and suburbs. The disappearance of most of these has doubtless been due to some such feeling, as that which has awakened the independent reforming zeal of the selectmen of the Town Council.—London Daily News.

Crying Down Credit. One of the rules of the Canadian military service is that of "crying down credit." In Toronto recently this rule was carried out in front of the postoffice. It consisted in a little ceremony performed by a sergeant major, a trooper and a trumpeter of the Canadian Dragoons. The trumpeter blew his trumpet and then the sergeant major in a voice of authority "cried down" the officer commanding the Canadian Dragoons would not be responsible for any debt contracted by the members of the regiment beyond a certain pay, and that even a day's pay would not be guaranteed if the debt was contracted for liquor.

Feeling the Servants. The custom of feigning the servants upon one's departure from a friend's house appears to be in questionable taste, but it has become almost universal, and a principle must sometimes make concessions to popularity where the matter does not involve a question of serious right and wrong. In England the omission of this custom would be regarded as an evidence either of parsimony or of ignorance, and we are thus initiated into the ways of the world when we know or imagine to be the case of a polite society in the "mother country."—Ladies' Home Journal.
