Council's Taste Is Under Fire

AMPTHILL, England (Reuters) Sir Albert Richardson, 77 - year-old architect and former president of the Royal Academy, has lost his battle to save this 18th-century town from concrete lamp posts that look "like expectant penguins."

To add insult to injury the town council is putting one of the posts in front of the Georgian home where he works by gaslight and has refused to install electricity.

"They have no taste and not even the taste to know that they have no taste," Richardson fired back Monday as he painted a sign to go beside the lamp post.

The sign reads: "These incongruous lamp posts that detract from the beauty of this historic town were erected by the urban district council against the advice of the Royal Fine Art Commission."
