

MR. AND MRS. FRANK BAGNALL

Hunter R. Couple Entertain On Their 45th Anniversary

A happy occasion was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bagnall at Hunter River on Sunday, January 16, when they entertained at a buffet dinner to celebrate their 45th wedding anniversary.

Mrs. Bagnall is the former Margaret, Ruth Burns of Malpeque, and the couple were married at her parent's home by the late J. M. Murchison. Present for the celebration were three relatives who had attended the wedding in 1921, Mrs. Bagnall's brothers, W. H. Burns of Summerside and J. S. Burns, Hunter River and also a cousin, Mrs. Roy Woodside, Summerside.

Home for the gathering was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bagnall, Frances and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Holman, of St. Stephen, N. B., and two of their children Billy and Patricia, also their granddaughter, Virginia and her husband (Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kays) and their son, Richard of Charlottetown.

Other members of their immediate family are daughter Irma and husband (Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Herlick) and granddaughter, Lynn and husband (Mr. Mrs. A. G. Gillies) all of Toronto, Ont., who, although unable to be present, remembered their parents with flowers and telephone messages.

Ushering at the door were nieces, Mary Louise and Wendy Lee Burns, and great grandson, Richard Kays, circulated the guest book.

The table was centered with a three-tiered anniversary cake, the gift of Mrs. Michael Doyle of Charlottetown.

Mrs. W. W. Burns and Mrs. J. S. Burns, sisters-in-law were assisted with the serving by Mrs. Don MacKay, Mrs. Clair MacLeod, Mrs. G. Holmes and Mrs. L. Kays. Mrs. Roy Woodside poured tea.

The couple were the recipients of many lovely gifts, including a remembrance from the local Women's Institute.

James to the door to enjoy for a moment the winter-scene without: the road winding prettily up the valley, for a time warmly in the lee of the woodlands across the road from lane's end, before we lose it at the top of a rise: the homes near and far in their cozy winter-settings; the fields reaching off to far hazy horizons.

James stopped at the house-corn to read the glass, before going on to the chowring. He shook his head, smiled a little uneasily. "It is lovely, Ellen," he agreed, "though fairly frosty I'm afraid we'll find some water-bowls caught. But then there was, and is, no wind. That would make a difference. It's the wind that sends the frost indoors."

So still it was all about. The branches of the trees were held as though painted there against the fresh morning-blue of the sky. Not a twig stirred. The smokes billowed up prettily, rose-hued now that the sun was moving up from the hills.

"Hi!" Mack the eldest son of the house across the lane called from the barnyard, in a greeting. "This is the right winter's day!" "There's a little delay this morning," Alex reported later with a resigned air. "Dad is what is it say? 'Trying to kill two birds with one stone.' He is taking us to school, and at the same time, a gist of grain to the feed-mill. But there, I hear the truck starting!" he smiled, "we won't be late after all."

So a load of feed ready for the mangers and troughs was brought in, in return. "It's amazing how much feed the stock takes this winter. Perhaps we notice it more than in former years, because this winter, we know we haven't so much to come and go on a visiting farmer, commented today. "Watch out - don't waste any feed!" we overheard James caution his grandson Gage, from the farm in the Road, this afternoon. "This winter every bite counts!" "I'm thinking there won't be many farmers sorry to see the spring break." "Oh, odd ones," Gage said, chuckling lightly. "Those who play hockey or curl." "But no farmers," James suggested with a teasing grin.

So this morning the little truck carried grist to a mill, and young scholars from ours and a neighboring farm to their classes. Among these was a little wondering lass, into her first winter there. "By this time next year..." Peter, now five, smiled at the exciting thought. "And what did you do with your day, Ellen?" James queries come in from the barns, after a late tour there. "What day?" we chuckle, of this one, the hours of which have winged so soon, and pleasantly away.

Until tomorrow - Diary - Good-night.....

Financial amplitude which stands between a person and the challenging necessity to tangle with life barehanded, and gather zest, courage, strength and purpose as byproducts of the wrestling match—that sort of "security" isn't always a blessing. It may be that your daughter has been victimized by too much sheltering of a negative kind.

THERE ARE MANY GOOD REASONS why I prefer to shop at DOMINION. Mainly because of the meat, of course! But another important reason is for savings, for old-fashioned values and downright low prices. Like me, you'll probably want to stock up on many staple items at this time and save a penny here, a nickel there and end up saving dollars on every trip! And buying Dominion's own famous brands is an especially good way to make extra savings, too! Sections about your daughter and her husband amount, really, to a conversational effort to reduce your vague overhanging fears of disaster to manageable size.

I gather that your characteristic way of coping with elderly difficulties, that elude definition, much less control, is to fume, fuss and find fault with familiar persons — as a sort of exercise in letting off steam.

At this distance I would have no way of knowing, no criteria for judging, the merits of your son-in-law's suggestion to his wife to take pills, since she's broken away from drug addiction.

Indeed I don't even know that he has so advised her. If she says he has, she might be fibbing. Or, if he is encouraging her to use pharmaceutical crutches, it may be that he is closer than you are to understanding her needs and limitations.

In any case, if she is seeing a psychiatrist twice a week, and putting her cards on the table as a patient should or even if she isn't, the psychiatrist is the person for you to consult, if you have substantial misgivings about her pill-taking, as possibly medically unauthorized.

There is a possibility, which you should consider, that your distrust of your son-in-law's conjugal sentiments, as being fundamentally hostile though overtly loving, is really a matter of "projecting" your own mixed feelings about your daughter at him.

In short, your theory that he is too sweet, that his devotion to his wife is too good to be true, that back of it all he probably wishes she were dead, may be your unconscious estimate of how you would feel in his shoes.

As for why your daughter seems to be working at destroying herself, when she has no financial worries, it could be that she has become chronically demoralized as a result of trying to get through life without growing.
