BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

THE SATISFIED ONE

Each one must live from day to day, Accepting what may come his way. —Old Mother Nature.

Billy Mink has a quick temper. Perhaps this should be expected for Billy is quick in all he does. Just now he was seeing red. You know that is what is said of people who have lost their tempers and are very, very angry. He ran this way and that, was snarling and growling and making threats of dreadful things he would do to some one. Just who that some one was he didn't know. It is always easier to threaten the unknown, and usually much safer.

Some one had taken a fish that Billy Mink had hidden in a hollow log at the edge of the Big River. Billy had gone off. When he returned there was no fish there. Now of course Billy knew that that fish couldn't have gone away of itself. Some one had taken it. It had been stolen. Anyway that is what he said. He forgot Old Mother Nature's law is that among the furred and feathered folk a thing belongs to one only as long as he may keep it in his possession. If some one else finds it and takes it it becomes his for as long as he can keep it. This is because most of the Green Forest and Green Meadow folk have to live day to day, making the most of what they can find each day.

If Billy Mink had caught that fish things would have been a little different. If the one who took that fish from the hollow log was a thief. It really had belonged to Plunger the Osprey, the big member of the Hawk family who lives wholly on fish and is often called Fish Hawk. Plunger had caught the fish. King Eagle had made him drop it while high in the air. It had fallen right in front of Billy and he had made off with it before King Eagle could swoop down and pick it up.

Billy Mink has a good nose. He had a whiff of scent here and a whiff of scent there around that old log, and just a wee bit of it in that hollow log. He suspected that the one who had left it was the one who had taken that fish. Now as he ran this way and that he was trying to follow that scent to find the one who had left it. He went up the bank of the Big River a little way. There he lost the scent. Then he turned the Big River. "Looking for some one?" asked a voice.

Billy Mink whirled about. He snarled as he did so. His eyes were red with rage. Facing him was one of the Green Forest folk so much bigger than Billy that it made Billy look actually smaller than he was. Then newcomer wore a black mask across his face. It went right across his eyes. It was very like the mask that robbers often wear. "Thief!" shrieked Billy Mink. "Who's a thief?" asked Bobby Coon, for of course that is who it was.

"You!" shrieked Billy. "You are a thief. You stole my fish." Bobby Coon shook his head. "I found a fish," said he. He wore a very satisfied look. He wore the look of one who had eaten a good dinner and enjoyed it.

"That was my fish and you stole it," snarled Billy Mink. "I found it in a hollow log. It wasn't anybody's hollow log. You know the law of Old Mother Nature as well as I do. Whatever one finds is his if he can keep it. I found that fish and I've kept it. It is where no one can take it away from me," declared Bobby Coon. He looked more satisfied than ever.

"Thief! Thief!" shrieked Billy Mink, and danced back and forth angrily. But he didn't quite dare to do anything more. Bobby Coon was too big, and though Billy Mink is a good fighter Bobby Coon is a good fighter too. There isn't a cowardly hair in the coat of either of them.

"I'm much obliged to you for providing me with such a good dinner," said Bobby in the most provoking way. He turned his back and moved off in the most unconcerned manner. Billy watched his ringed tail disappear among the bushes.

"I'll get even with him some time," muttered Billy, which of course was a very foolish thing to say. It always is.

TOKYO, Sept. 28 — (Reuters)—An American light bomber crashed on houses near an airbase in Southern Japan yesterday killing three Japanese and one member of its crew. Three other crew members baled out safely.

Contract Bridge

By Josephine Culbertson

A WINNING COMBINATION

Careful counting, plus an application of common sense gave South his game contract on the following deal:

East dealer. Both sides vulnerable.

♠ K 7 4	♠ Q 10 5
♥ J 8 3	♥ A K Q
♦ J 8 3 2	♦ 10 7 6
♣ A K 6	♣ 7 4
	♣ A 4
	♣ 9 4
	♣ A K Q 10 9 6
	♣ J 5 3

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
3♥	4♠	Pass	5♠
Pass	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the heart eight; East won with the ten and continued with the king and ace. South ruffed the third round high, then drew the adverse trumps in two rounds.

Even at this early stage, South was able to count East for seven hearts and two diamonds, and he now proceeded to complete the count as best he could. He cashed the spade ace, led to the spade king and ruffed dummy's last spade, carefully noting that East followed suit throughout.

Now South knew that East had held at least 12 cards in the heart, spade and diamond suits; consequently, he could not have more than one club. That club, of course, might be the queen, but with West originally holding six clubs against East's one, the chances were precisely six to one that the queen was held by West! If that was so, it would be ridiculous to lead a low club to the king in an effort to drop the queen.

South saw, however, that East could have either of two clubs that would let South run the suit without loss—namely, the ten or the nine. On this "two to one" basis, South led the club jack through West! The latter, sure that South would let the jack ride, covered with the queen, but when dummy won and the nine-spot dropped from East, South simply returned to his own hand with a trump and took the marked finesse against West's club ten, up to dummy's A-8.
