Iowans Make The Most Of Pork, Corn And Oats

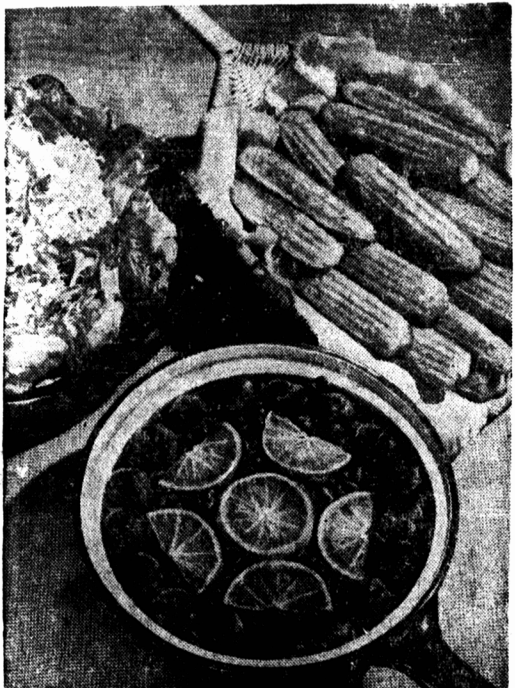

By Ida Bailey Allen

The cordial greeting of my hostess, Mrs. William A. Seidler, program chairman, and the reception committee of the Iowa Federation of Women's Clubs, made me feel at home in Oskaloosa from the moment I stepped into the hotel lobby.

It seemed incredible that this thriving town of 12,000 was about to celebrate its centennial. Part of the Hotel Downing, in which I stayed, was put up in 1874. It was then an earthenfloored tavern which furnished lodging and food for the covered-wagon traffic and housing for oxen and horses. It also functioned as a trading post and gathering place for worship, funerals and public meetings.

FORMER TRADING POST
And yet, within less than a hundred years, the trading post had become a modern hotel. On ground formerly trod by Indians, were beautiful homes, churches, banks, buildings and shops. And meetings in that town for the week were 60 delegates of the most influential group of women in Iowa, the Federated Clubs.

"Madame," observed the Chef, "I am impressed by the Americanism of the ladies in Iowa, so I have created a menu featuring three of the great products of their State—pork, corn and oats."

Wed In Saskatoon

Gladioli were attractively arranged in St. Paul's Cathedral, Saskatoon, Sask. for the wedding of Nadaine Elizabeth Philippa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis L. McMahon of Charlottetown, P. E. I., and Mr. Conrad Richard Bomersbach, son of Mrs. M. J. Bomersbach and the late Mr. Bomersbach. Father W. Macgillivray performed the double rite ceremony and celebrated the nuptial mass. Mrs. Eleanor Billes-burger provided wedding music and sang appropriate hymns during the Mass.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a waltz-length gown of white tulle with bodice and sleeves of Chantilly. Her head-dress with a circlet of pleated tulle and seed pearls, from which fell a French, hand-turned chapel length veil. She carried red sweet heart roses interspersed with lily-of-the-valley.

Attending the bride was her sister, Miss Leah, who wore a ballerina gown of midnight blue over side the kitchen door. A shower of late afternoon had left the earth with a clean scrubbed look. From behind the barn, as twilight settled, came the chug-a-rum of a bullfrog in the creek and the moo of a cow to her newborn calf. Whippoorwills sounded the nesting call as the first fireflies darted hither and yon. And I knew contentment!

"It is good to be alive on such a night. In fact, if you can adopt my philosophy, it's good to be alive any time."

Even, we agree, on just such a day as was this one, overset grayly with mists and showers on the farmlands.

Night gathers in the households now, brings them from last chorings at piggeries and stable, shelters them from the rain on the roof. Mack stopped by a minute to tell with a happy smile that "those kittens get cuter and cuter and not one is smarter than another," before going along the path which leads to the house across the lane. School is an agreeable place to him these days, when there is no work of harvest or threshing to turn young thoughts field-ward. And the teacher is to his mind "The best teacher I ever had!"

"Ellen!" James calls us to the kitchen. The night is a little lonely. And we wrap up our day, tenderly, as we have before this some small sleepy child and tuck it away to sweet rest.

Until tomorrow - - - Diary - - - Good-night . . .
