ELLEN'S DIARY

Mushroom Picking Is A Very Rewarding Task

"This was a mushroom morning, the air balmy, the wind, a light caressing touch on the cheek, when we came in quest of the delicate, tasteful fare. . . . It's best to go after them early in the morning, because they grow up overnight," a farmwife said recently. "I gather my harvest of them - have for years, in an old pasture down toward the end of the farm. Sometimes, if it chances to be a good season for them, I find the too along the lane, or in the field where the crop of rutabagas grow. . . . Dear me, doesn't that sound funny!" she smiled. "The humble turnips have put a airs of late, haven't they?"

"We will become used to it," we nodded.

"As old Mr. T. used to say 'Like Paddy with the hangin'!" she laughed.

"But going back to the mushrooms, I always put some away in the deep freeze. If you prefer, they may be cooked before freezing. Otherwise the large ones should be sliced, the button sized left whole, and all dipped in lemon water to prevent discoloration - three teaspoons of lemon juice to a pint of water, then blanched before storing. They may be used in so many ways: in sauces and dressings and soups. Even in mixing biscuits and dumplings."

"There are enjoyable incidents to gathering them," we said "It's like stealing off alone from the home-cares to a berry-patch or for a walk up a wood's road. You find before long your cares have lightened, because you had found that quiet there which allowed you to reason clearly - to get things in a proper perspective, and you found your problem were solved."

"This was a nice morning, pleasantly warm, and fragrant with the ripenings of Autumn, and though at times showery, quietly lovely about. 'Hi, Y. Woman!'" James called after us up the fields' lane. "don't you know there's another shower brewing? The mushrooms will still be there, and grown so much larger, when it clears!"

We smiled to ourself, recalling the reply one of the younger pair of lads at the house across the lane had given us when we, one day reminded them not to play in the damp of a shower."

Public Attitude About B-B Guns Is Much Too Casual

NEW YORK - Several eye injuries to children are frequently caused by a casual attitude towards air rifles because they're not "real" guns.

Yet most of the injuries occur solely because B-B guns do not have the power of real rifles according to an article in the current issue of an American magazine. Air rifle pellets generally do not penetrate the target object, and as a result the shot bounces away unpredictably. All too often the pellet hits the eye of a bystander or the shooter.

"Although exact figures on the number of eye injuries caused by air rifle pellets are hard to obtain, there are a few indications of the extent of such accidents," stated the article. "At the University of California Medical School . . . a study showed that in six cases of severe eye hemorrhage were caused by B-B shot. And at the Charlotte, North Carolina Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital, 81 cases of eye injury due to B-B guns . . . were treated in nine years."

"Though injuries, other than to the eyes, are rare, that alone is sufficient reason for grave concern," stated the article. "Eyesight is too valuable to risk."

The National Society for the Prevention of Blindness suggests that the use by minors of B-B guns be limited to supervised practice on rifle or archery ranges. According to the article, leading manufacturers of air rifles also advocate shooting at firing ranges with adequate safety precautions.

"Americans still cherish the right to bear arms. But with that right go responsibility and respect for weapons," said the magazine. "A child who can handle a gun at all, can handle it with responsibility. He should learn to shoot on supervised firing ranges, in safety programs set up to fit his needs."

"Target shooting is fun and it

Toronto Woman Spurns Shaw's Poem Offer

TORONTO (CP) - What woman would have turned down an offer by George Bernard Shaw to write a poem to her? Mrs. Charles Pyper, 75, says she did - in favor of an inscription by the playwright to her husband.

Nancy Pyper, whose 80-year-old husband is a former editorial writer with the Toronto Telegram, says she first fell in love with Shaw through the medium of his plays when she taught drama at the University of Manitoba in the early '30s. She did not get a chance to meet the playwright until 1934 when after settling in Toronto she visited the annual Shaw Festival in Malvern, England.

Mrs. Pyper simply telephoned Shaw's room at a hotel, asked if she might come up and see him, and heard a gasp of incredulity from the great man's male secretary.

Immediately she raised her voice and turned on her feminine charm in the hope that Shaw might overhear what she was saying to the secretary.

"You may tell Mr. Shaw," she said, "that I am responsible for a considerable part of his income in Canada and am in a position to increase that income by producing more of his plays."

SPEAKS TO SHAW
Mrs. Pyper heard a voice say: "Let me speak to her." After several interviews with Shaw during the course of the festival, Mrs. Pyper bought a new volume of the playwright's collected works and asked him to inscribe it for a man named Charlie.

Shaw frowned and demanded: "Who is Charlie?" Mrs. Pyper replied: "He's my husband."

"Let me write a poem to you instead."

"No. I want a book inscribed to Charlie. He's a writer too and I love him."

"I will write three stanzas to you rather than inscribe a book to Charlie."

"An inscription for Charlie or nothing."

So in a volume in the Pyper's Toronto apartment today one can read in Shaw's spidery hand: "Inscribed to one Charlie, entirely unknown to me, at the instance of Mrs. C. B. Pyper of Toronto-24 July, 1934."

Mrs. Pyper saw Shaw seven or eight times after those first meetings - sometimes at the Malvern Festival, sometimes at his town apartment in Whitehall Square, sometimes at his country home, Ayot St. Lawrence, and occasionally at London parties during the war when she was a lieutenant-commander in navy.

Through Shaw she met Yets, O'Casey and many other poets and playwrights, and Sir Edward Elgar, the composer.

PLAN FOR LIGHT

can be a safe pastime, too, provided we parents see to it that all guns, including air rifles, are used properly," the article concluded.
