Strange But True
 By F. H. MacArthur

One of the reasons why Scotland Yard holds such a high place among the detective bureaus of the world is because their key men are selected from the ablest uniformed men in the 20,000 man police force of London City.

In France, no detective is drawn from the uniformed police. The detective squad are entirely distinct, although in the French capital they both come under the Prefect Police.

Another striking difference between English and French detectives is size. England likes 'em big and burly, while France picks them small, not over 5' 7". The idea is that a small man is less conspicuous.

Sark Island, off the south coast of England, is ruled by Mrs. Sybil Hatheway under feudal rights granted her family by Queen Elizabeth.

Only one election has been held on the tiny island in 30 years and the population voted to retain the Duke Peter, the heir to the throne of Russia, an imbecile whom she later choked to death because she grew to despise him. From then until the time of her death, Catherine the Great ruled an empire inhabited by fifty different races whom she called her "Little Household." Although she never married again she had many love affairs which smeared the name of Russia's royal family and brought disgrace to her Imperial Majesty.

What woman by changing the color of her hair caused the circulation of a newspaper to jump three hundred per cent in one day? Ans.—Almee Semple McPherson, who was born at Ingersoll, Ontario. Legally, her name was Almee Semple McPherson Hutton. The story of her life is as fascinating as Alice in Wonderland. This remarkable woman drove a rickety old car into Los Angeles and made a million dollars in 16 months. How did she do it? By becoming a lady evangelist.

The latest thing in ladies' mirrors is a two-faced glass for dolling up. One side of the new mirror shows a bluish-silver color while the other is tinted golden-rose. The first shows a woman how others see her in the daytime, the second shows how she will show up under artificial lighting at night. How my lady longs for a third sided glass which would show her in a state of perpetual youth!

All birds, with the exception of owls, have eyes on each side of the head. This increases the range of their vision without having to turn their heads.

The Python snake of Malaya has 576 vertebrae, or a hundred more than any other creature.

The Mihara volcano on Oshima Island, Japan, has been the scene of thousands of suicides in recent years. Indeed, so many Japs were tossing themselves into the volcanic pit that the government was forced to throw a guard of policemen around the crater's edge.

Just why people want to leap into the seething lava has never been explained. Certainly some suicides can be traced to feeble-mindedness, but not the mass self destruction such as took place at Mihara in 1932.

Although the late lamented Will Rogers rubbed shoulders with kings, queens and other so-called blue-bloods, he never owned a full dress suit, seldom had more than $5.00 in his pockets at one time, was proud of his Indian ancestry; never played golf although he had a nine-hole golf course on his 250 acre ranch near Hollywood, murdered the King's English, but earned $5.00 a second for his radio talks and $2,800 a word for his newspaper column, Rogers never cast a vote during his lifetime because he never stayed long enough in one place to register and vote.

A banana and a human have three things in common: breathing, generating own body heat, and being skinned.

The Panama Canal is the greatest engineering work ever carried out. In the process of building 300,000,000 tons of earth and rock had to be excavated, enough material to build a wall 5 ft. thick right around the world! The entire project cost 210,000 pounds. By using the Panama Canal, the distance from one coast of North America to the other is shortened by 8,000 miles, and the present rate of traffic is over 30,000,000 tons annually. A total of 5,500,000 is collected each year.

Catherine the Great of Russia was not even great nor was she Russian. She arrived in Moscow a poverty-stricken German princess, yet managed to marry Grand Duke Peter, the heir to the throne of Russia, an imbecile whom she later choked to death because she grew to despise him. From then until the time of her death, Catherine the Great ruled an empire inhabited by fifty different races whom she called her "Little Household."
