Fondness For Children

Childless Couple Criticized For Devoting Time To Youngsters

DEAR MISS DIX: We have been married several years, and, to our great disappointment, have no children. We are very fond of the young people around us, and delight in taking them to our lodge at the lake to swim, for picnics, or to have them in for an evening of games and popping corn. We are very careful about these groups; the youngsters are never in the house alone and their parents all approve of their being with us. Rarely do we even have a mixed group; usually it's an all-girl or all-boy party. Most of them are high-school juniors or seniors. What's upsetting me is that many people in the neighborhood are beginning to criticize us because we are so much with the young folks, rather than with those our own age (I am 35, and my husband 41). My husband and I both work, and enjoy spending our free time with young people.

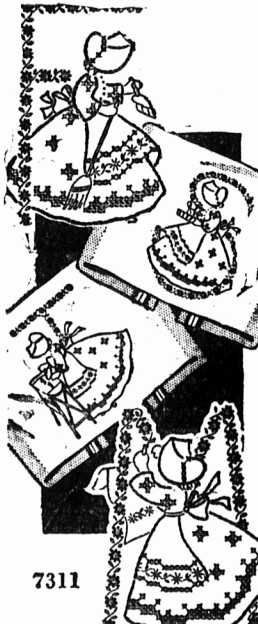

WELL-EQUIPPED COUPLE

MRS. L. B.

ANSWER: Directing the social activities of teen-agers is a demanding job, for which you and your husband seem singularly well equipped. Since the criticism comes from others than the parents of

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

This morning the September storm was past and with the early restoration of our electrical power we were able to enter again the paths of our familiar round. In its wake, there was some disorder among the stocks and James shook his head despairingly over the prospect of the now tedious harvesting of "that better field." Apples still immature lay in abundance beneath the orchard trees and although the buildings suffered no damage from the gale, tokens of its visit were about.

It was one of the topics of conversation at breakfast. "I remember wakening when a fearful gust shook the house—I believe that is what woke me," Jamie related. "I listened awhile and then fell asleep again. And the next time I woke," he smiled at the nice memory, "the wind had blown itself out! It was so calm then I thought I must have been dreaming before. But there was plenty to remind me of it out about this morning. The flowers," his tone was sad, "took a bad beating—they're, well, I'd rather not look at them."

"And that grain-field we have to cut!" James added. However, in no time the binder was repeating it happily and all this ideal harvest day the work of harvesting continued with more than a few stocks added to the design which is patterning the gently rolling stubbles.

"We mended the little at heart, sympathizing with Jamie over the bent plants and wasted flowerings about the lawn but smiled over the conversation of a pair of robins—for the time perched quietly there on the fruited branch of the rowan-tree—though Mack, our visitor of today—and youngest Grandson—listening intently, declared with a sceptical smile, "I don't hear one word out of them!"

"Listen!" we laughed. "Papa-robin says: 'Well, woman, although we've had a very nice summer round about here-ha, that blow of last night makes me have thoughts about moving...'"

"Down South," Mack nodded. "So one of these times, when you're out of work, you'd better pack some of our things, to be sent by the express to help in a hurry. It may not be long before there will come a snap of frost..."

"And ice on the little puddles!" Mack commented, doubtless with an itching toe. "And, 'Oh dear,' she says, 'Isn't that always the way—we hardly get settled in a place before it's time to move! And hasn't it been nice here except that sly white cat? But the children were good to us; they were careful to leave our nest and eggs and babies alone'..."

"I might just touch an egg," Mack offered, "but that wouldn't harm it, would it?" "And Papa-robin says 'And this time, don't forget to take my shaving-kit and my other red vest and...'"

"Nothing else!" Mack laughed, "for neither of them is saying one word! You're just making-believe!"

As was James this evening when day's end brought him home from the stooking to rest in an old armchair. "I don't think, Ellen," he said, "I'll work quite so hard at the stooking tomorrow... The days are long enough yet to fire a fellow some at the field-work!"

Until tomorrow... —Diary... Good-night....

The Stars Say --

By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow

THIS day's positive vibrations should be a welcome change from the enervating period just past. So make the most of it and put those inspirational ideas and deferred plans to work. Remember, however, that clear thinking is essential if you would avoid errors and miscalculations in your work program. Configurations for the evening hours indicate that social activities should be exceptionally enjoyable since there is a tendency toward unusual warmth and friendliness on the part of most persons. New friendships should be encouraged and there is the possibility of making contacts that may prove valuable in a business way.

For the Birthday

If tomorrow is your birthday, the months ahead promise much in the way of progress and expansion but

Cook's Corner

LEMON PIE FILLING

2 lemons
3 eggs
2 cups water (1 hot, 1 cold)
1½ cups white sugar
3 heaping tablespoons flour
2 teaspoons butter

Method:
Mix sugar and flour, add rind and juice of lemons, egg yolks beaten, add cold water, then hot water; add salt, and cook in double-boiler until thick—remove from stove and add butter.

Meringue:
Beat egg whites until light, but not dry, then add sugar gradually, allowing one level tablespoon for each egg white—spread carefully over pie filling, so that it touches crust on all sides. Brown in moderate oven.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. If you have been invited to a party, or other affair, and after accepting your contract, a heavy cold, what should you do?
A. Telephone your hostess and express how sorry you are that you cannot attend. You are being considerate, not only of your own welfare, but also of the other people by remaining at home.
Q. Is it ever permissible for the parents of a young man who is to be married to announce the engagement?
A. No; only the parents of the bride-elect are entitled to do this. If she has no parents, then her nearest relatives have the privilege.
Q. When a man is the guest of another man in a restaurant, should he leave a tip for the waiter, or should he supplement the tip given by his host?
A. No; it is the duty of the host to supply the tip.

How Can I ...

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I fix a wide-brimmed hat so it will stay on during windy weather?
A. Sew a small comb, teeth upward, inside the front part of the crown. When you put the hat on, the comb goes through your hair without missing it and holds the hat securely on the head.
Q. How can I freshen a black felt hat which has gotten dull looking or rain-splattered?
A. Hold it over the spout of a steaming kettle, and then buff with a soft brush or a piece of felt to bring up the nap.
Q. How can I make my youngster's leggings warmer?
A. Try taking the bottom half of some discarded pajamas, dye it the correct color, and sew inside the leggings as an extra lining.

MEETING OF PHYSICIANS AND LAYMEN TO DISCUSS HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

Most businessmen would naturally say that a physician has as much right to sit in at a meeting of executives and businessmen as a businessman has to sit in at a meeting of physicians. However, when the meeting of the businessmen has to do with the health of their executives and employees, businessmen can learn something about medicine from physicians and vice versa.

As heart and blood pressure diseases cut down executives and other employees of a business organization, it was quite fitting that at the May meeting of the American Heart Association's Council for High Blood Pressure Research, a group of business leaders was present to learn something about the main cause of the deaths of their executives and other employees.

At this meeting, the Council chose a successor to the late Alva Bradley, Cleveland business leader, who served as its president. Mr. Bradley died of a heart ailment last March. He was influential in winning support from corporation executives for research into heart and high blood pressure which take a heavy toll of management and labor alike.

The sessions were devoted to telling the businessmen what was being done to prevent and control heart and blood-vessel diseases. To drive this information home, an entire morning of the two-day meeting was held to report this to them in lay language.

Dr. Irving S. Wright, noted heart specialist, New York City, past president of the Association's Scientific Council, was chairman and a panel discussion was held on the subject, "The Layman Asks the Doctor About Heart Disease."

From the above we can see how the American Heart Association, through its Council for High Blood Pressure Research, is fulfilling its two-fold task of supplying scientific information for its dual membership which includes research investigators and physicians as well as business and industrial leaders who are interested in supporting advances in the field of heart and blood vessel diseases.

"These sessions were devoted to reports by five research investigators who are concerned with developing improved methods of treating and diagnosing high blood pressure (hypertension), the causes of which are relatively little known."

While we think of this as part of the American Heart Association's humanitarian work, the saving of these useful lives—business executives and laboring men, both necessary to the full life of the community—is really an invaluable asset to that community.

Preview Of Queen Elizabeth's Visit To Jamaica During Royal Fall Tour

By Calvin Bowen

KINGSTON, Jamaica (Reuters)—The Queen's first glimpse of her ancient colony of Jamaica, when she arrives Nov. 25 by plane from London on her Australasian tour, will be of a curving blue bay lipped with creamy white sand and a green-blue backdrop of mountain reaching down to the water's edge. She will be looking at Jamaica's second city, the tourist centre of Montego Bay, on the island's romantic north coast.

As her stratosphere touches down on the island's second airport, the Queen will look out on a scene which has never failed to bring a sparkle to the eyes of the first-time visitor to Jamaica: Gleaming sunshine from an azure sky lighting nature's own green and gold decor, with shimmering blue water reaching as far as eye can see.

Two nights after leaving England and having spent the previous day in Bermuda, the Queen will step out of the plane into a semi-tropical climate. Although it will be November, this is a land of perpetual summer.

At the airport to meet the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh will be the leading people of the island, headed by the governor, Sir Hugh Foy, one of the Commonwealth's youngest colonial governors. Sharing the reception honors with him will be the island's chief minister, Alexander Bustamante.

Demonstrating the progress being made toward Caribbean federation, the Queen will also be welcomed by representatives of other territories in the British West Indies, who will come here for the occasion on the invitation of the Jamaican legislature.

Among these may be burly Albert Gomes of Trinidad; dignified Grantley Adams of Barbados; "elder statesman" Albert Marry-

Soaking Chicken Impairs Flavor

By Alton L. Blakelee

CHICAGO (AP)—Soaking chicken in water before cooking it steals away some of the tasty flavor, a chemist said Wednesday. Cold water or any water apparently takes out some of the chemicals that create flavor, Eidon L. Phippen of the Western Regional Research Laboratory, Albany, Calif., told the American Chemical Society.

He suggested using as little water as possible to clean a chicken. Or letting a frozen chicken thaw out by itself rather than by running water over it. Fat has little to do with the flavor of a chicken, he finds. The meat itself is the main source, with some flavor coming from the bones and skin. The research is part of a study to learn what the chemical nature of chicken flavor is. That knowledge could lead to tastier Sunday dinners.

Morning Smile

A cub reporter was sent to cover the annual class play of the local high school. Being new to the job, he described the event in glowing terms, instead of a more factual report used by more experienced newspapermen for such an event, and concluded with the words: "And the auditorium was filled with expectant mothers, eagerly awaiting their offspring."
