"KENSINGTON" AGAIN.

SIR,—In Thursday's Guardian a writer signing "Summerside" affects to reply to my first letter. His reply being personal and political, I would not notice him were it not for the charge of a breach of the ninth commandment made in it. I did not say that the Guardian did not condemn the slanderers appointment. Let him read again the paragraph misquoted and he will see that I charged the Guardian with being quiet about the corruption of the local Government. Is that statement no, true? And with being dumb about the way the local Government is manipulating the enforcement of the Scott Act, &c. Is that not true? When did the Guardian ever call on the Government to account for the Scott Act fines? It is untrue that I blamed the Town Council of Summerside. I blamed the 'town' for turning the Scott Act into a high license. Mr. Hunt may be the controlling spirit, &c., of the Town Council, but who puts him there year after year? And if he did not satisfy the people of Summerside, it is strange how he is elected without opposition. Another untruth is that my friends at Ottawa are making exhibitions of themselves. It is untrue, and slanderous as well.

The bar at Ottawa is conducted on the same plan as the Charlottetown Club, and Mr. Davies being president of the latter institution he may be supplying the ideas as to its management. By the way many liberals are making capital about that institution at Ottawa, but did any of them ever make a motion that it be abolished? The grievance argument is silly. The people who drove the rum business out of the village regardless of how it affected their business should not be taunted with a grievance about losing by it.

The tone of Summerside's reply, and the fact that it tries to injure a Conservative, and that the Guardian is the paper to publish it in, is another proof, if any were necessary, that it can find space for that kind of news. Let "Summerside" go to work, as we have done, and close the rum shops, and let him, at the same time, turn up the ninth commandment, commit it to memory and try to practice it, and his next attempt will not abound with misstatements like his last.

KENSINGTON.

"IKE ICICLE" REPLIES TO "MIKE BICYCLE."

Mike Bicycle, Esq:—

SIR,—I hasten to acknowledge having an ocular demonstration of your classical effusion in last evening's DAILY EXAMINER. I shall preserve your criticism as an example of parvum in multo, a diarrhoea of words embracing a constipation of ideas. You are, certainly, an impetiginous scrogle, like those who envious of any moral celsitude, carry their ungicity to the height of creating symposically the fecund words which my pollymathic genius uses with uberty to abligate the tongues of the weetless. You have crassly paralied my own pet words as if they were transgrams. I will not coascervate reproaches. I will oduce a veil over the atramental ingratitude which has chamferad even my indiscreptible heart. I am silent on the fecillation, which my coadjurancy must have given you on my humble attempt at pourtraying the many attainments of our Cardigan talent. I will not speak of the lippitude, the oblipsy you have shown inexacerbrating me, one whose genius you should have approached with mental discalceation, one whose philiprogenitiveness and honorificibilitudinity you, though no doubt a proantitransubstantiationist, should have admired. So I tell you, with supervacaneous words, nothing will render ignoscible your conduct to me. I warn you that the transsubstantiantiationableness and incomprehensibility of your writings, show that you are taken velocipedestrienistical strides which will eventually terminate in the disfranchisement of your present state of inbecility. So go, tachygraphic scrogle, hand with your crass inquinate fantors, draw objections from the thought, if you can, of having synchronically lost the estimation of

PAINTING ON GLASS.

Easy Decorative Work of Which Use Can be Made in the Household.

Painting on glass in imitation of pietra dura or mosaic is a pretty pastime. The results, too, are, as a rule, most satisfactory, the appearance of inlaying being imparted to the surface. The painting is in flat tints, and crude, bright colors must be avoided.

The materials required are ordinary oil colors, mirrorine medium, some artists' enamels, sable brushes and a good black for grounding. Japanese black lacquer covers better than most of them, and a tube of ecailline brown black for outlining.

The glass must be thoroughly cleaned with soap and hot water and free from smears. Place the glass face downward over the design to be copied, and put in the outlines with ecailline brown and mirrorine medium; a fine sable brush is used, and the lines must be solid and very equal in thickness. They will take some time to dry—perhaps two days; they must be dry and hard before the next painting is started, otherwise their sharpness and decision will be entirely marred, and cannot be restored without great trouble.

The tone for coloring must be chosen from among those that are found in stone and marble, of which there is an infinite variety; gray, red, yellow, green and blue abound, and can be blended in every conceivable manner. In arranging the scheme of color to be carried out, it will be found that a combination of three or four tints well arranged and balanced will prove easier to manage, and more satisfactory in result, than a kaleidoscopic arrangement of a number of colors, which is apt to impart a bewildering effect to the design. Each different tint of the oil colors must be mixed up ready for use in sufficient quantity to cover all the parts required; it does not answer to mix with the brush as the work progresses; the color would be certain to vary and look like paint, not stone.

Mix mirrorine with the color and cover solidly, taking care to keep within the outlines. The enamel can be used instead of oil-color and thinned with mirrorine answers very well; if the tints are not exactly what is required, they can be modified with oil colors.

The whole of the design being filled in with the various tints selected, the ground has to be well covered with the black varnish. It does not matter if this looks somewhat rough and lumpy at the back. The face will appear, nevertheless, perfectly smooth; the only precaution to be observed is to fill up all thin places, as the varnish dries very quickly; it can be retouched again and again without much delay. If any accidents occur, either in the painting or varnishing, paraffin applied with a cloth will remove everything and enable corrections to be made on the clean glass.

White, dull red and stone color on a black ground make a good combination; dull buff and yellow against black; dark blue, light blue, Indian red, yellowish green, against an ivory white ground are suggested as suitable combinations of color for pietra dura. Glass painted in this fashion is used for table tops, for small wall panels, for cache pots and various articles of this description.

Women in Politics.

That woman in politics means purity in politics one Kansas woman has started out to demonstrate in an interesting way. Mrs. D. P. Leslie was elected county clerk in Brown county at the last election. She, of course, pledged herself to appoint only deserving persons to offices in her control. She has begun by making her daughter chief deputy. She knows the character of this appointee thoroughly and is satisfied of her fitness and integrity. Now the workers are wondering how far her faith in her own family goes.

COURTING A QUAKER MAID.

The Agreement Entered Into by Two Ardent Maryland Brothers.

The later "assemblies" of Annapolis, Marlborough, and Chestertown were hardly more "in vogue" than the yearly meetings of the Eastern Shore Quakers. Their curious quaintness, and the picturesque contrast they presented to the radiant attire and libertine manners of the world's people, who minuetted and coquetted in manor-houses, and caroused and ruffled in cockpits and bowling-courts, drew Romanists and "English Catholics" to the doors of their sober conventicle, and filled its leafy approaches with profane chariots and chairs, and prancing steeplechasers and side-saddled palfreys. So it happened that to the yearly meeting held at Third Haven, near Talbot Court-house, in the year 1700, there came by opposite ways, through groups of booths erected by the graceless and irreverent for the sale of trumpery and tipple, a Quaker maiden mounted on a pillion behind her father, and two plumed and rapiered cavaliers gaily curveting. The wimpled maid, whose overcoming charms still bloom in tradition, was Sarah Covington of Somerset, and the prancing cavaliers were the brothers Edward and Philemon Lloyd, sons of Madam Henrietta Maria aforesaid. Immediately the pretty lads, with a sudden equal passion, loved the wimpled maid, and yearned for her; and each conceived a cunning purpose, proper to the country and the time, and shrewdly held his peace.

When the meeting was over, the brothers, each taking his cunning scheme in hand, mounted and galloped away, taking different ways; and they rode hard, laughing as they rode, for joy of their boyish artifice. After lingering for a while in places remote from the highway, where was no fear of discovery by any chance acquaintance, and so that the slower Quaker folk might have time to regain their homes, they rode on into Somerset—and met at their charmer's gate. First they swore, then they blushed, and then they laughed loud and long. Phil said, "Let her be for whichever, you or I, did see her first"; and Ned, the elder and the heir, assented. Then said Phil, "No sooner had I taken my place in the meeting than I beheld the girl, and loved her." And Ned said, "I passed the night before the meeting at the 'Peach-Blossom' farm; and at the foot of the hill, turning into the gate at the water-mill, I saw the girl on a pillion behind her father, and they inquired the way to the meeting-house: and I loved her." Then Phil rode back to Talbot, and Ned dismounted at the gate, and led his horse to the porch. Thus in 1703 Sarah Covington became the wife of the heir, and mistress of Wye House. She it was who in 1733 built with "English" brick the house of "Readbourne" in Queen Anne's County, that typical colonial mansion, still in excellent preservation, and showing an imposing pile fitted with materials brought over from England, where the noble hall and the broad stairway of the period confer a characteristic distinction.—"Certain Worthies and Dames of Old Maryland," by John Williamson Palmer, in the February Century

Edible Trimmings for Capes.

A correspondent writes: "Shopping in Paris teaches us many things, and among others the new uses to which are put familiar substances. A fashionable trimming for ladies' black capes is now a gelatine lozenge. The 'sequin,' as it is called, is a thin, small pastille, dyed black, and having the effect of jet. Each sequin is sewn on separately, and with each garment the purchaser does well to buy a box of the ornaments, as they are liable to drop off.

"Fortunately for the wearer of gelatine trimming, rain, at least in our hemisphere, does not descend warm, otherwise the decorative part of a mantle would dissolve in a shower. In cold weather a new substitute for jet loses neither substance nor color. Cheapness and lightness are the advantages of this edible haberdashery."—London News.

Acquiring Knowledge.

"Papa, what is an old saw—not the saw you saw with, but the kind this paper speaks about?"

"What old saw does the paper speak about?"

"That's what I want to know. It says:—'Everybody has heard the old saw, "never look a gift horse in the mouth."' I want to know where the saw comes in."

"Well, there's your old saw. An old saw is an old proverb."

"Why shouldn't you look a gift horse in the mouth?"

"Because—because it's bad taste. It's ungrateful and all that sort of thing."

"All what sort of thing?"

"Why, to look a horse in the mouth that has been given to you shows that—it shows that you are not thinking of the giver, but at the value of the gift.

"What would anybody want to look a horse in the mouth for?"

"To tell how old it is."

(After a pause) "Papa, can you tell how old a saw is by looking at its teeth?"—Chicago Tribune.

Applying the Text.

In an old-fashioned home in New Orleans there was company at dinner, and the ladies were discussing the woman question.

A gentleman present, after hearing all the pros and cons, facetiously remarked that two preachers were discussing the same problem recently in his hearing, and they both agreed that it portended evil, and "that women were responsible for most of the evils in the world—in fact, that women were worse than men."

One of the ladies indignantly retorted: "Indeed, they are not; women are the salt of the earth."

"Dat's so, honey," put in old Aunt Susan from the kitchen; "dat's de Bible truf, for shore. Women is de salt ob de earth, Just think ob Lot's wife."

And everybody laughed at the sudden and unexpected application of the old Bible story.—New Orleans Picayune.

To Learn to Know You Don't Know.

The first thing a person has to learn is, as Socrates observed some time ago, that he knows nothing—and this perhaps is more true in politics than in anything else. Yet on political questions every one seems to be under the impression that he is possessed of exceptional knowledge. If two nations fall out on some moot point, it is evident that both cannot be in the right—the probability being that the right lies betwixt and between the divergent views of either; for each is influenced in the conclusion drawn by patriotism and other such passions, rather than by reason. This is why it is wise in such cases to submit the matter to some third persons, who decide with a perfect indifference of reason, instead of the two nations cutting each other's throats—a course of action which can only show which is the strongest, rather than which is in the right.—London Truth.

Baron de Hirsch is dead. He was known as one of the richest of Hebrews, and one of the most generous. The poor and oppressed of his people in many lands benefitted by his charity, and from many lands will go up a tribute of praise to his memory.
