LIVING IN CITIES.

The Apartment House is Breaking Up American Homes.

I have no mind to harrow up the minds of my readers with any explication of the Laieseries and mysteries that confront the average housekeeper in the daily maintenance of a simple but comfortable existence for her family. As for herself, an existence at all seems a struggle which at times she would gladly give over. One might define a heroine as the average American woman who does her own housekeeping. But some hint of the unnatural and unhappy state of affairs existing at present may be deduced from the consideration of two economic facts.

First, woman is by nature a home founder and a homemaker. This is not intended as an assertion of personal belief, but as a statement of scientific fact. It was woman—not man—who opened the industrial world. It was woman who made the first rude dwellings and dressed skins and wove textiles for clothing. It was woman and not man who made the first fire and the first utensils for cooking and the first rude tools for industrial ends. All her activities clustered about the hearth and ministered to the home. If the woman and the work had not reacted upon each other so that today women should be by nature homemakers and home lovers, there are still depths for the scientists to sound in the working of heredity and of natural selection.

And yet—here is my second fact—the enormous piles of stone and brick rapidly filling the choice plots of ground in our large cities and shutting out the light of heaven with their gabled tops are mute if not magnificent witnesses to the fact that the investment of capital is all against the perpetuation of the separate home. The shrewd modern investor is willing to put hundreds of thousands against hundreds of dollars that (for his lifetime at least) women are going to prefer the ease of the apartment hotel to the separate house with its privacy, its own table, and—alas!—its own service.—Helen Watterson Moody in Scribner's.

PHIL SHERIDAN'S FLASK.

A Funny Story about the Little Hero of Winchester.

Captain Irving M. Bean of Milwaukee tells the following story about General Sheridan, which he says has never appeared in print: When stationed in Chicago General Sheridan liked very much to get away to North lakes in Waukesha county for a fishing trip now and then and passed many pleasant days on the lake. On one visit the general went out early in the morning in the boat, and after staying out for several hours with no luck decided to return. Rowing in, he landed near a field where a farmer was plowing.

Sheridan stopped and watched the plow turning the furrow so even and straight, the fresh earth rolling away from the steel shoe like a brown wave running on the shingle. Leaning on the rail fence, he waited until the farmer came up, and, speaking to him, produced a flask of antidote for snake bite, and asked the farmer to join him in a nip.

The invitation was instantly accepted, and the farmer took what might be described by an expert as "three fingers." Wiping his mouth, the agriculturist broke the silence by asking, "Stranger, what might your name be?"

"Phil Sheridan," was the reply.

"Why, that's the same name as the great general."

"Yes," said General Sheridan modestly, "and, by the way, I am the general."

With this he started to move away. The farmer was dazed for a moment, and then, gathering himself together, and the liquor adding somewhat to his loquacity, he cried: "Say, stranger, that liquor of yours is almighty good, but I don't think as much of your stories. You General Sheridan!" with a scornful glance at the little man in the rough fishing suit. "Why, General Sheridan was a man 7 feet high. Stranger, I just think you are the blindest liar I ever met."

Sheridan walked off down the road bursting with laughter over the farmer's description. He related the encounter to his friends with great gusto, and it became one of his favorite stories.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Why He Cut the Wires.

The person who wrote that electricity was one of the "mighty agents of nature enchaind by the ingenuity of man" can scarcely have contemplated in his wildest dreams the full extent of that ingenuity. For instance, he is scarcely likely to have prophesied that a sick man, far from the habitations of civilization, would have cut a telegraph wire in order to obtain assistance. And yet such has really occurred, according to a London contemporary. The whole of the vast continent of Australia was practically cut off from European news for nearly 24 hours in the middle of September, 1897, in consequence of an interruption on the line between Adelaide and Port Darwin. Inquiries were made, and it was found that the wire had been cut by a cyclist who was taken ill while on a journey across the continent. It is not related how he set about it, but he had the satisfaction at any rate of getting what he wanted. It is not desired to establish this as a precedent of summoning help under inconvenient circumstances.—Electrical Review.

The Secret of Success.

"I have never forgotten," said Mr. Nogleby, "the wise remark that a young man once made to me, years ago. It was this, 'One thing leads to another.' This was apropos of a further advantage that I had brought into view by a step I had just taken. The moral of this is—it has been set forth often (I may have mentioned it myself), but it will bear endless repetition—that if we would succeed we must keep stirring!"—New York Sun.

Australian Fever Cure.

"What's that fired grave for?" asked the recruit.

"Fella all sick; weather bad and budgerie no good down 'bout Womba. Plenty rain one time, fella catch cold; plenty fever this time; by'm by fetch 'im longa that place," explained Warrigul, as a litter emerged from a wurley of the camp, and the sick man was borne to the curious grave. The doctor walked in the rear.

Thrusting his hand into the long ditch, to test its warmth, the doctor signaled to lower the patient into it. He was then covered from neck to foot, feet and all. His head alone rested above the dirt. Sergeant Dalton explained:

"The blacks put fever patients in the ground like that and steam the fever out. They say the earth will draw off the evil spirit, and then fill him with life."

"Electric currents, by Jove!"

The next day the late patient was bobbing around like a 3-year-old.—Oving.

Paine's Celery Compound, the World-famed Spring Medicine, Gives Mr. Ducharme a New Lease of Life.

This is the Trade Mark of the Kind That Cures—Look for the Name "PAINES" and the Stalk of Celery—Refuse all Substitutes and Imitations

GENTLEMEN:—For a long time I was subject to spells of weakness that rendered me quite unfit for work. At such times my nervous condition was very alarming, and I felt as if my life was coming to an end. My sufferings were increased owing to violent attacks of rheumatism, and together I was as helpless as a child. Friends strongly advised me to use Paine's Celery Compound, as they had seen such grand results from its use. I used the Compound, and the results were astonishing and happy. Paine's Celery Compound has done for me what the doctors failed to do. It has made me active and strong, able to work every day, and has given me a new lease of life. Every sick, weak and broken-down man and woman should use Paine's Celery Compound; there is nothing like it in the world.
 Yours truly,
 ALFRED DUCHARME,
